Competency Based Training (CBT) and assessment an introduction for trainers

Competency

Competency refers to the ability to perform particular tasks and duties to the standard of performance expected in the workplace.

Competency requires the application of specified knowledge, skills and attitudes relevant to effective participation, consistently over time and in the workplace environment.

The essential skills and knowledge are either identified separately or combined.

Knowledge identifies what a person needs to know to perform the work in an informed and effective manner.

Skills describe the application of knowledge to situations where understanding is converted into a workplace outcome.

Attitude describes the founding reasons behind the need for certain knowledge or why skills are performed in a specified manner.

Competency covers all aspects of workplace performance and involves:

- Performing individual tasks
- Managing a range of different tasks
- Responding to contingencies or breakdowns
- Dealing with the responsibilities of the workplace
- Working with others.

Unit of Competency

Like with any training qualification or program, a range of subject topics are identified that focus on the ability in a certain work area, responsibility or function.

Each manual focuses on a specific unit of competency that applies in the hospitality workplace.

In this manual a unit of competency is identified as a 'unit'.

Each unit of competency identifies a discrete workplace requirement and includes:

- Knowledge and skills that underpin competency
- Language, literacy and numeracy
- Occupational safety and health requirements.

Each unit of competency must be adhered to in training and assessment to ensure consistency of outcomes.

Element of Competency

An element of competency describes the essential outcomes within a unit of competency.

The elements of competency are the basic building blocks of the unit of competency. They describe in terms of outcomes the significant functions and tasks that make up the competency.

In this manual elements of competency are identified as an 'element'.

Performance criteria

Performance criteria indicate the standard of performance that is required to demonstrate achievement within an element of competency. The standards reflect identified industry skill needs.

Performance criteria will be made up of certain specified skills, knowledge and attitudes.

Learning

For the purpose of this manual learning incorporates two key activities:

- Training
- Assessment.

Both of these activities will be discussed in detail in this introduction.

Today training and assessment can be delivered in a variety of ways. It may be provided to participants:

- On-the-job – in the workplace
- Off-the-job – at an educational institution or dedicated training environment
- As a combination of these two options.

No longer is it necessary for learners to be absent from the workplace for long periods of time in order to obtain recognised and accredited qualifications.

Learning Approaches

This manual will identify two avenues to facilitate learning:

Competency Based Training (CBT)

This is the strategy of developing a participant's competency.

Educational institutions utilise a range of training strategies to ensure that participants are able to gain the knowledge and skills required for successful:

- Completion of the training program or qualification
- Implementation in the workplace.

The strategies selected should be chosen based on suitability and the learning styles of participants.

Competency Based Assessment (CBA)

This is the strategy of assessing competency of a participant.

Educational institutions utilise a range of assessment strategies to ensure that participants are assessed in a manner that demonstrates validity, fairness, reliability, flexibility and fairness of assessment processes.

Flexibility in Learning

It is important to note that flexibility in training and assessment strategies is required to meet the needs of participants who may have learning difficulties. The strategies used will vary, taking into account the needs of individual participants with learning difficulties. However they will be applied in a manner which does not discriminate against the participant or the participant body as a whole.

Catering for Participant Diversity

Participants have diverse backgrounds, needs and interests. When planning training and assessment activities to cater for individual differences, trainers and assessors should:

- Consider individuals' experiences, learning styles and interests
- Develop questions and activities that are aimed at different levels of ability
- Modify the expectations for some participants
- Provide opportunities for a variety of forms of participation, such as individual, pair and small group activities
- Assess participants based on individual progress and outcomes.

The diversity among participants also provides a good reason for building up a learning community in which participants support each other's learning.

Participant Centred Learning

This involves taking into account structuring training and assessment that:

- Builds on strengths – Training environments need to demonstrate the many positive features of local participants (such as the attribution of academic success to effort, and the social nature of achievement motivation) and of their trainers (such as a strong emphasis on subject disciplines and moral responsibility). These strengths and uniqueness of local participants and trainers should be acknowledged and treasured
- Acknowledges prior knowledge and experience – The learning activities should be planned with participants' prior knowledge and experience in mind
- Understands learning objectives – Each learning activity should have clear learning objectives and participants should be informed of them at the outset. Trainers should also be clear about the purpose of assignments and explain their significance to participants
- Teaches for understanding – The pedagogies chosen should aim at enabling participants to act and think flexibly with what they know
- Teaches for independent learning – Generic skills and reflection should be nurtured through learning activities in appropriate contexts of the curriculum. Participants should be encouraged to take responsibility for their own learning

- Enhances motivation – Learning is most effective when participants are motivated. Various strategies should be used to arouse the interest of participants
- Makes effective use of resources – A variety of teaching resources can be employed as tools for learning
- Maximises engagement – In conducting learning activities, it is important for the minds of participants to be actively engaged
- Aligns assessment with learning and teaching – Feedback and assessment should be an integral part of learning and teaching
- Caters for learner diversity – Trainers should be aware that participants have different characteristics and strengths and try to nurture these rather than impose a standard set of expectations.

Active Learning

The goal of nurturing independent learning in participants does not imply that they always have to work in isolation or solely in a classroom. On the contrary, the construction of knowledge in tourism and hospitality studies can often best be carried out in collaboration with others in the field. Sharing experiences, insights and views on issues of common concern, and working together to collect information through conducting investigative studies in the field (active learning) can contribute a lot to their eventual success.

Active learning has an important part to play in fostering a sense of community in the class. First, to operate successfully, a learning community requires an ethos of acceptance and a sense of trust among participants, and between them and their trainers. Trainers can help to foster acceptance and trust through encouragement and personal example, and by allowing participants to take risks as they explore and articulate their views, however immature these may appear to be. Participants also come to realise that their classmates (and their trainers) are partners in learning and solving.

Trainers can also encourage cooperative learning by designing appropriate group learning tasks, which include, for example, collecting background information, conducting small-scale surveys, or producing media presentations on certain issues and themes. Participants need to be reminded that, while they should work towards successful completion of the field tasks, developing positive peer relationships in the process is an important objective of all group work.

Competency Based Training (CBT)

Principle of Competency Based Training

Competency based training is aimed at developing the knowledge, skills and attitudes of participants, through a variety of training tools.

Training Strategies

The aims of this curriculum are to enable participants to:

- Undertake a variety of subject courses that are relevant to industry in the current environment
- Learn current industry skills, information and trends relevant to industry
- Learn through a range of practical and theoretical approaches
- Be able to identify, explore and solve issues in a productive manner

- Be able to become confident, equipped and flexible managers of the future
- Be 'job ready' and a valuable employee in the industry upon graduation of any qualification level.

To ensure participants are able to gain the knowledge and skills required to meet competency in each unit of competency in the qualification, a range of training delivery modes are used.

Types of Training

In choosing learning and teaching strategies, trainers should take into account the practical, complex and multi-disciplinary nature of the subject area, as well as their participant's prior knowledge, learning styles and abilities.

Training outcomes can be attained by utilising one or more delivery methods:

Lecture/Tutorial

This is a common method of training involving transfer of information from the trainer to the participants. It is an effective approach to introduce new concepts or information to the learners and also to build upon the existing knowledge. The listener is expected to reflect on the subject and seek clarifications on the doubts.

Demonstration

Demonstration is a very effective training method that involves a trainer showing a participant how to perform a task or activity. Through a visual demonstration, trainers may also explain reasoning behind certain actions or provide supplementary information to help facilitate understanding.

Group Discussions

Brainstorming in which all the members in a group express their ideas, views and opinions on a given topic, is a free flow and exchange of knowledge among the participants and the trainer. The discussion is carried out by the group on the basis of their own experience, perceptions and values. This will facilitate acquiring new knowledge. When everybody is expected to participate in the group discussion, even the introverted persons will also get stimulated and try to articulate their feelings.

The ideas that emerge in the discussions should be noted down and presentations are to be made by the groups. Sometimes consensus needs to be arrived at on a given topic. Group discussions are to be held under the moderation of a leader guided by the trainer. Group discussion technique triggers thinking process, encourages interactions and enhances communication skills.

Role Play

This is a common and very effective method of bringing into the classroom real life situations, which may not otherwise be possible. Participants are made to enact a particular role so as to give a real feel of the roles they may be called upon to play. This enables participants to understand the behaviour of others as well as their own emotions and feelings. The instructor must brief the role players on what is expected of them. The role player may either be given a ready-made script, which they can memorise and enact, or they may be required to develop their own scripts around a given situation. This technique is extremely useful in understanding creative selling techniques and human relations. It can be entertaining and energising and it helps the reserved and less literate to express their feelings.

Simulation Games

When trainees need to become aware of something that they have not been conscious of, simulations can be a useful mechanism. Simulation games are a method based on "here and now" experience shared by all the participants. The games focus on the participation of the trainees and their willingness to share their ideas with others. A "near real life" situation is created providing an opportunity to which they apply themselves by adopting certain behaviour. They then experience the impact of their behaviour on the situation. It is carried out to generate responses and reactions based on the real feelings of the participants, which are subsequently analysed by the trainer.

While use of simulation games can result in very effective learning, it needs considerable trainer competence to analyse the situations.

Individual /Group Exercises

Exercises are often introduced to find out how much the participant has assimilated. This method involves imparting instructions to participants on a particular subject through use of written exercises. In the group exercises, the entire class is divided into small groups, and members are asked to collaborate to arrive at a consensus or solution to a problem.

Case Study

This is a training method that enables the trainer and the participant to experience a real life situation. It may be on account of events in the past or situations in the present, in which there may be one or more problems to be solved and decisions to be taken. The basic objective of a case study is to help participants diagnose, analyse and/or solve a particular problem and to make them internalise the critical inputs delivered in the training. Questions are generally given at the end of the case study to direct the participants and to stimulate their thinking towards possible solutions. Studies may be presented in written or verbal form.

Field Visit

This involves a carefully planned visit or tour to a place of learning or interest. The idea is to give first-hand knowledge by personal observation of field situations, and to relate theory with practice. The emphasis is on observing, exploring, asking questions and understanding. The trainer should remember to brief the participants about what they should observe and about the customs and norms that need to be respected.

Group Presentation

The participants are asked to work in groups and produce the results and findings of their group work to the members of another sub-group. By this method participants get a good picture of each other's views and perceptions on the topic and they are able to compare them with their own point of view. The pooling and sharing of findings enriches the discussion and learning process.

Practice Sessions

This method is of paramount importance for skills training. Participants are provided with an opportunity to practice in a controlled situation what they have learnt. It could be real life or through a make-believe situation.

Games

This is a group process and includes those methods that involve usually fun-based activity, aimed at conveying feelings and experiences, which are everyday in nature, and applying them within the game being played. A game has set rules and regulations, and may or may not include a competitive element. After the game is played, it is essential that the participants be debriefed and their lessons and experiences consolidated by the trainer.

Research

Trainers may require learners to undertake research activities, including online research, to gather information or further understanding about a specific subject area.

Competency Based Assessment (CBA)

Principle of Competency Based Assessment

Competency based assessment is aimed at compiling a list of evidence that shows that a person is competent in a particular unit of competency.

Competencies are gained through a multitude of ways including:

- Training and development programs
- Formal education
- Life experience
- Apprenticeships
- On-the-job experience
- Self-help programs.

All of these together contribute to job competence in a person. Ultimately, assessors and participants work together, through the 'collection of evidence' in determining overall competence.

This evidence can be collected:

- Using different formats
- Using different people
- Collected over a period of time.

The assessor, who is ideally someone with considerable experience in the area being assessed, reviews the evidence and verifies the person as being competent or not.

Flexibility in Assessment

Whilst allocated assessment tools have been identified for this subject, all attempts are made to determine competency and suitable alternate assessment tools may be used, according to the requirements of the participant.

The assessment needs to be equitable for all participants, taking into account their cultural and linguistic needs.

Competency must be proven regardless of:

- Language
- Delivery Method
- Assessment Method.

Assessment Objectives

The assessment tools used for subjects are designed to determine competency against the 'elements of competency' and their associated 'performance criteria'.

The assessment tools are used to identify sufficient:

- a) Knowledge, including underpinning knowledge
- b) Skills
- c) Attitudes

Assessment tools are activities that trainees are required to undertake to prove participant competency in this subject.

All assessments must be completed satisfactorily for participants to obtain competence in this subject. There are no exceptions to this requirement, however, it is possible that in some cases several assessment items may be combined and assessed together.

Types of Assessment

Allocated Assessment Tools

There are a number of assessment tools that are used to determine competency in this subject:

- Work projects
- Written questions
- Oral questions
- Third Party Report
- Observation Checklist.

Instructions on how assessors should conduct these assessment methods are explained in the Assessment Manuals.

Alternative Assessment Tools

Whilst this subject has identified assessment tools, as indicated above, this does not restrict the assessor from using different assessment methods to measure the competency of a participant.

Evidence is simply proof that the assessor gathers to show participants can actually do what they are required to do.

Whilst there is a distinct requirement for participants to demonstrate competency, there are many and diverse sources of evidence available to the assessor.

Ongoing performance at work, as verified by a supervisor or physical evidence, can count towards assessment. Additionally, the assessor can talk to customers or work colleagues to gather evidence about performance.

A range of assessment methods to assess competency include:

- Practical demonstrations
- Practical demonstrations in simulated work conditions
- Problem solving
- Portfolios of evidence
- Critical incident reports
- Journals
- Oral presentations
- Interviews
- Videos
- Visuals: slides, audio tapes
- Case studies
- Log books
- Projects
- Role plays
- Group projects
- Group discussions
- Examinations.

Recognition of Prior Learning

Recognition of Prior Learning is the process that gives current industry professionals who do not have a formal qualification, the opportunity to benchmark their extensive skills and experience against the standards set out in each unit of competency/subject.

Also known as a Skills Recognition Audit (SRA), this process is a learning and assessment pathway which encompasses:

- Recognition of Current Competencies (RCC)
- Skills auditing
- Gap analysis and training
- Credit transfer.

Assessing competency

As mentioned, assessment is the process of identifying a participant's current knowledge, skills and attitudes sets against all elements of competency within a unit of competency. Traditionally in education, grades or marks were given to participants, dependent on how many questions the participant successfully answered in an assessment tool.

Competency based assessment does not award grades, but simply identifies if the participant has the knowledge, skills and attitudes to undertake the required task to the specified standard.

Therefore, when assessing competency, an assessor has two possible results that can be awarded:

- Pass Competent (PC)
- Not Yet Competent (NYC).

Pass Competent (PC)

If the participant is able to successfully answer or demonstrate what is required, to the expected standards of the performance criteria, they will be deemed as 'Pass Competent' (PC).

The assessor will award a 'Pass Competent' (PC) if they feel the participant has the necessary knowledge, skills and attitudes in all assessment tasks for a unit.

Not Yet Competent' (NYC)

If the participant is unable to answer or demonstrate competency to the desired standard, they will be deemed to be 'Not Yet Competent' (NYC).

This does not mean the participant will need to complete all the assessment tasks again. The focus will be on the specific assessment tasks that were not performed to the expected standards.

The participant may be required to:

- a) Undertake further training or instruction
- b) Undertake the assessment task again until they are deemed to be 'Pass Competent'.

UNIT TITLE: RECRUIT AND SELECT STAFF		NOMINAL HOURS: 65
UNIT NUMBER: D1.HML.CL10.15 D1.HRM.CL9.10 D2.TRM.CL9.20
UNIT DESCRIPTOR: This unit deals with skills and knowledge required to enable a supervisor to identify future staffing needs and take appropriate action to employ workers to meet these human resource needs including implementation of induction and orientation programs.
ELEMENTS AND PERFORMANCE CRITERIA	UNIT VARIABLE AND ASSESSMENT GUIDE
Element 1: Identify staffing needs 1.1 Obtain and read enterprise policies and procedures in relation to the staffing process 1.2 Identify internal factors that impact on staffing needs 1.3 Identify external factors that impact on staffing needs 1.4 Describe techniques to monitor workplace performance 1.5 Consult with stakeholders to determine staffing needs 1.6 Describe and quantify staffing requirements by position and locate them within an organisational chart 1.7 Undertake a job analysis of each identified position 1.8 Prepare job specifications and job descriptions for identified positions	Unit Variables The Unit Variables provide advice to interpret the scope and context of this unit of competence, allowing for differences between enterprises and workplaces. It relates to the unit as a whole and facilitates holistic assessment This unit applies to organizations that are involved in recruiting and selecting staff to work within the labour divisions of the hotel and travel industries and may include: 1. Front Office 2. Housekeeping 3. Food and Beverage Service 4. Food Production 5. Travel Agencies 6. Tour Operation Enterprise policies and procedures in relation to the staffing process may include: • Details of information that may and may not be used in a job advertisement

Element 2: Recruit staff 2.1 Identify and quantify positions to be advertised 2.2 Develop key selection criteria for each position to be advertised 2.3 Obtain authority to recruit staff 2.4 Identify sources of staff 2.5 Develop and lodge job advertisements/notices with identified sources of staff Element 3: Interview staff 3.1 Accept job applications 3.2 Short-list applicants 3.3 Check references and referees 3.4 Notify applicant of interview 3.5 Conduct job interview 3.6 Apply relevant testing procedures 3.7 File application and interview documentation Element 4: Select staff 4.1 Choose successful applicant/s using pre-defined criteria 4.2 Notify successful applicants and make formal job offer 4.3 Notify unsuccessful applicants 4.4 Follow-up as required	• Staff promotion policies, especially internal promotions • Staff training • Remuneration • Probationary periods • Terms and conditions of employment • Benefits • Every individual staff policy, such as uniform, personal presentation, smoking, tact and diplomacy, sickness, attendance and punctuality, use of company property • Composition of interview and selection panels • Designated authorities for hiring staff • Discretionary power in relation to negotiating staff conditions and remuneration • Industrial relations, equal opportunity and diversity legislation. Internal factors that impact on staffing needs may include: • Budget • Level, number and competency levels of current staff • Service standards, opening hours, volume of customers, peak demands, nature and type of customers • Direction of business and established business reputation • Type of service being offered and equipment being used • Promises made to customers by the enterprise • Anticipated or unpredictable staff turnover.

Element 5: Implement induction and orientation session or program 5.1 Plan the induction and orientation session/s 5.2 Conduct the induction and orientation session/s 5.3 Review the induction and orientation session/s	External factors that impact on staffing needs may include: • The external business, economic and competitive environment • Activities being undertaken by competitors • Customer expectations • Emerging trends • Changes in legislation and technology • Availability of appropriately qualified staff to recruit across all identified staffing positions. Techniques to monitor workplace performance may include: • Statistical analysis of labour and revenue figures • Quantitative and qualitative research and analysis • Internal and external research/benchmarking • Consideration of different formal and informal research methods including customer-focused research/feedback. Stakeholders may include: • Owners • Boards of directors • Shareholders • Senior management, including Head Office • Supervisors • Staff • Customers • Suppliers.

	Staffing requirements may include: • Preparation of an organization chart showing every position within the host enterprise • Allocation of a title to every position on the organization chart. Job analysis refers to: • The function of gathering all the relevant facts, details and information about a job. Job specification refers to: • All the information about the type of employee needed to do a particular job effectively The job description refers to: • All the information about the job itself. Key selection criteria may relate to: • Experience • Competencies • Qualifications • Compatibility. Sources of staff may include: • Media advertisements • Job and recruitment agencies • Internet • Internal advertising including internal promotions • Schools and trade colleges • Industry network contacts • Other employers.

	Job advertisements/notices may relate to: • Production of media advertisements • Providing information to job agencies • Compliance with legislation regarding the advertising for staff. Short-list applicants refers to: • Development of a list of applicants who will proceed through to the interview stage of the selection process. Check references and referees refers to: • Reading written references submitted as part of the application • Verifying written references • Validating the claims made at interview by the job applicant by contacting people and organizations for whom they have previously worked that are listed in their application. Job interview may include: • One-on-one and face-to-face interviews • Panel interviews • Group interviews • Over-the-phone interviews • First, second and/or third interviews • Applying appropriate questioning and listening techniques • Recording answers supplied by applicants • Responding to applicant questions • Equity and compliance issues • Devising questions to be asked of all applicants.

	Testing procedures may relate to: • Trade or technical tests to determine competency • Psychometric testing and/or profiling • Medical examinations • Drug and alcohol tests. Choose successful applicant/s may relate to: • Rating applicants against selection criteria • Obtaining feedback and consensus from all interviewers • Considering test results • Ranking interviewees. Follow up successful applicants may relate to: • Obtaining original copies of documents presented at interviews • Explaining details of the job offer, contract or employment instrument • Confirming acceptance of the job offer • Offering the job to another applicant if the first choice refuses the offer. Plan the induction may relate to: • Identifying the topics to be covered which may include: ▪ Completion of necessary paperwork ▪ Provision of 'need to know' information ▪ Tour of premises/department ▪ Meeting with management and introduction to staff ▪ Allocation of uniform and badges ▪ Detailed work role induction including explanation of relevant policies and procedures, company expectations, job descriptions, roster, individual and shared responsibilities and supervision ▪ Explanation of enterprise aims, directions, plans and objectives ▪ Explanation of key performance indicators (KPIS) ▪ Explanation of occupational safety and health (OSH) issues ▪ Explanation of enterprise benefits and 'reward and recognition' schemes ▪ Provision of practical demonstration/training to enable required service delivery ▪ Culture of the organization ▪ Communication channels • Sequencing the content of the induction • Allocating time and resources to the induction • Arranging for the necessary other staff and personnel to be present at induction • Minimizing operational disruption • Optimizing effectiveness. Assessment Guide The following skills and knowledge must be assessed as part of this unit: • The enterprise's policies and procedures in regard to staff recruitment, selection and inductions • Knowledge of the industrial relations and equal opportunity of the host country • Ability to draft job advertisements and liaise with employment agencies and the media • Interviewing, negotiation, communication and inter-personal skills • Knowledge of the operational aspects of the areas for which staff are being recruited and selected • Knowledge of industrial relations, equal opportunity and other employment-related legislation of the host country.
--	---

	Linkages To Other Units • Develop and implement a business plan • Maintain a paper-based filing and retrieval system • Develop and implement operational procedures • Develop and supervise operational approaches • Establish and maintain a safe working environment • Manage the effective use of human resources • Monitor staff performance • Roster staff • Manage workplace diversity • Manage and maintain effective workplace relations. Critical Aspects of Assessment Evidence of the following is essential: • Demonstrated ability to identify staffing needs for a designated venue/department given certain trading and other conditions and limitations • Demonstrated ability to draft a print media advertisement for a nominated job • Demonstrated ability to prepare a job description, a job specification and a set of key selection criteria for a nominated work position • Demonstrated ability to short-list a set number of written job applications by assessing the suitability of the applicant's qualifications and experience against the designated key selection criteria • Demonstrated ability to interview a set number of applicants for a given job and evaluate their suitability for the position using designated key selection criteria • Demonstrated ability to explain and effectively defend the rationale for selecting the successful applicant • Demonstrated ability to make a formal job offer to a successful job applicant • Demonstrated ability to organize, conduct and review an orientation and induction program for a new employee for a designated job position.
--	--

	Context of Assessment Assessment must ensure: • Actual or simulated workplace conditions on which to base the preparation/recruitment activities, and a realistic workplace context in which to conduct the job interview. Resource Implications Training and assessment must include the use of appropriate industry sector terminology, employment terms, pay rates, terms and conditions of employment and reference to all legislation as applicable to the relevant industry sector of the host country in actual or simulated workplace conditions; and access to workplace standards, procedures, policies, guidelines, tools and equipment. Assessment Methods The following methods may be used to assess competency for this unit: • Observation of practical candidate performance • Role plays • Case studies • Oral and written questions • Third party reports completed by a supervisor • Project and assignment work • Simulations.

	Key Competencies in this Unit
	Level 1 = competence to undertake tasks effectively
	Level 2 = competence to manage tasks
	Level 3 = competence to use concepts for evaluating
	Key Competencies	Level	Examples
	Collecting, organizing and analysing information	2	Gather information to use as the basis of job descriptions, specifications and analyses; read, digest and rank job applications
	Communicating ideas and information	2	Interview applicants; develop job-related documents in conjunction with others; operate as a member of a panel interview
	Planning and organizing activities	2	Arrange and schedule interviews and inductions
	Working with others and in teams	2	Cooperate with others in development of job-related documentation, interviews and inductions
	Using mathematical ideas and techniques	2	Statistical analysis of labour and revenue figures; quantitative research
	Solving problems	1	Conduct and follow-up on reference checks; deal with situations where successful applicant rejects job offer
	Using technology	1	Enter data into in-house systems

Recruit and select staff

This unit comprises five Elements:

- Identify staffing needs
- Recruit staff
- Interview staff
- Select staff
- Implement induction and orientation session or program.

Slide 2

Assessment

Assessment for this unit may include:

- Oral questions
- Written questions
- Work projects
- Workplace observation of practical skills
- Practical exercises
- Formal report from employer.

Slide 3

3.	Trainer advises trainees that assessment for this Unit may take several forms. All are aimed at verifying they have achieved competency for the Unit as required. Trainer indicates to trainees the methods of assessment that will be applied to them for this Unit.

Slide

Identify staffing needs

Performance Criteria for this Element are:

- Obtain & read enterprise policies & procedures in relation to the staffing process
- Identify internal factors that impact on staffing needs
- Identify external factors that impact on staffing needs
- Describe techniques to monitor workplace performance
- Consult with stakeholders to determine staffing needs

Slide

Identify staffing needs

- Describe & quantify staffing requirements by position & locate them within an organisational chart
- Undertake a job analysis of each identified position
- Prepare job specifications and job descriptions for identified positions.

Slide 5

5.	Trainer continues to identify for trainees the Performance Criteria for this Element, as listed on the slide. Class Activity – General Discussion Trainer leads a general class discussion on identifying staffing needs by asking questions such as: • What policies and procedures do you think apply in workplaces to the staffing process? • What do you think is 'the staffing process'? • What internal factors within businesses might impact on staffing needs? • What factors outside a business might affect staffing requirements? • What experience do you have with workplace monitoring of staff performance? How was it undertaken? Why do you think it was done? • What do you think is an 'organisational chart'? Why might a business create an organisational chart? • What is a 'job analysis' and why would a business undertake them? • What is a 'job description' and how does it differ to a 'job specification'? • Why would a business create a job description and a job specification for job vacancies?

Slide

Obtain & read enterprise staffing policies & procedures

You must learn your workplace staffing policies & procedures.

These will vary between employers based on:

- Their experience
- Size of the operation
- Ownership
- Legal ('compliance') requirements.

6.	Trainer instructs trainees no effective action in relation to the recruitment and selection of staff can occur until the enterprise policies and procedures relating to the staffing process are understood. Staffing policies and procedures will vary between workplaces based on: • Their previous experiences with staff recruitment and selection – previous experience will influence what is contained in the policies and procedures. The current policies will be drafted to prevent repeating mistakes made before • The size of the business – smaller businesses tend to be more informal whilst larger businesses tend to be more regimented • Personal preferences of the owner – an owner-operated business will reflect the personal orientations of the owner, a company-owned business is likely to have more structured and more formal policies and procedures • Legal requirements applying to individual business types or industry sectors – to ensure compliance with relevant employment laws.

Job advertising policies and procedures may include:

- Job advertising, addressing:
 - What is to be included & excluded in advertisements
 - Media to be used to advertise vacancies
 - Recruitment agencies to be used
 - Type of online job vacancy advertising.

Slide 7

Slide No	Trainer Notes
7.	Trainer presents to trainees examples of possible staffing policies and procedures used by employers: Job advertising • This may address: ▪ Information that may and may not be included in a job advertisement – some employers: – Will not want the name of their business included in advertisements – so applicants and others do not know who is advertising for staff – Will not want their telephone number included – to avoid the need to respond to numerous calls enquiring about the job – Will not want their address included – to prevent applicants calling in in-person to make enquiries • The newspapers in which job advertisements are to be lodged – including: ▪ Type and size of advertisements ▪ Use of company logo ▪ Days of the week the advertisement is to run ▪ Duration of advertising period – for example, one week or a fortnight

	• Job recruitment agencies to be used – and the information to be given to them about the vacancy • Online recruitment to be undertaken – identifying websites to be used and not to be used. - Internal promotion of staff:
 - Requiring all vacancies to be externally advertised
 - Requiring internal staff are considered before external advertising occurs
 - This policy will spell out the criteria for determining when a vacancy should be advertised externally.

Slide 8

Slide No	Trainer Notes
8.	Trainer continues to present and explain to trainees possible workplace staffing policies and procedures: Internal staff promotions • This may address: ▪ A statement all vacant positions must be advertised externally. This is done to ensure the company cannot be accused of failing to address EO obligations or to source the most suitable employee ▪ A statement the enterprise will attempt to fill all vacant positions from within before advertising externally. This alternative is designed to demonstrate to staff the employer will reward staff effort and excellence, recognise training, responsibilities undertaken and qualifications and abilities of staff. This gives staff a career path within the business and helps the employer retain staff ▪ Criteria for determining whether a job should be advertised externally or not. 9.	Trainer continues to present and explain to trainees possible workplace staffing policies and procedures: Staff training • This will cover: ▪ The basic induction training all new employees are required to undertake on joining the enterprise ▪ Pre-requisite training for nominated positions to ensure staff have: – Complied with legally imposed training or certification requirements – Learned the necessary basic skills and knowledge to enable them to discharge their designated tasks and responsibilities. This may include: – Customer service skills – Technical work such as operating equipment and systems – Completing documentation – Cash handling – Workplace security – Occupational health and security

	▪ The commitment of the enterprise towards training – in terms of time allowed for staff to undertake training, training costs the enterprise will pay for if staff attend external training. Trainer continues to present and explain to trainees possible workplace staffing policies and procedures: Probationary period • The probationary period occurs when a new employee starts work with an employer. It is commonly a three month period during which: ▪ The employer can determine whether or not they are going to continue employing the new staff member ▪ The new employee is 'on probation' – their work and they themselves are under scrutiny to see if they measure up ▪ The employer is entitled to dismiss them without being concerned about unfair dismissal accusations being levelled at them ▪ The employee can elect to leave the employer • Some enterprises do not have probationary periods, and some have periods longer than three months. Slide 14

14.	Trainer continues to present and explain to trainees possible workplace staffing policies and procedures: General staff behaviour and presentation – may be two separate policies • There is commonly a raft of policies dictating enterprise expectations in relation to: ▪ Uniform – wearing, cleaning, laundering and replacement of uniform ▪ Personal presentation –personal hygiene, hair, facial hair, wearing of make-up and jewellery, grooming and deportment ▪ Smoking – some businesses will ban smoking totally during work hours, some venues will require staff to brush their teeth or use mints after smoking and before serving customers ▪ Tact and diplomacy – this is especially important for staff who have direct contact with customers and the common requirement is all employees are expected to use tact and discretion when dealing with all people (including suppliers, agents, other staff) ▪ Sickness – every enterprise will require staff to notify the business as soon as possible if they are unable to attend work for any reason, including illness. Some enterprises may require staff who are unable to work due to illness to provide a medical certificate proving they were ill. In food handling situations, many employers require those directly involved in the handling of food (other than food in sealed containers) to supply a medical certificate stating as a food worker they are fit to return to work and food handling duties

	▪ Attendance and punctuality – most venues will require employees to: – Come to work on time as indicated by the official roster – Remain at work until their rostered time for breaks or departure – Work reasonable amounts of overtime as requested by their employer – Not leave work when dealing with a customer – Notify management as soon as possible if unable to attend work for any reason ▪ Use of company property – most venues prohibit staff from using company property for personal use or gain. This means: – Workplace telephones cannot be used for private calls – Workplace computers and internet cannot be used for private purposes – Products and services (such as but not limited to food, beverages, stationery, tickets, complimentary guest items) cannot be used or taken by staff – this is regarded as stealing and may lead to instant dismissal and criminal; prosecution. You must know exactly what your policies & procedures contain because:

- They govern actions
- They stipulate what you cannot do
- They enable you to answer questions
- They provide the basis for aligning staff with business goals.

Slide 19

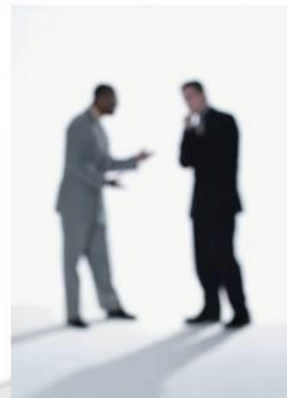

Slide No	Trainer Notes
19.	Trainer explains to trainees it is important for them understand enterprise policies and procedures as they provide guidance for their thinking and action. They also give parameters within which they are expected to operate. A sound knowledge of these policies and procedures will: • Enable them to make decisions in relation to staff recruitment and selection – through knowing what is or not allowed • Allow them to answer questions about employment in the workplace – such as those asked by job applicants, staff seeking promotion or management who question workplace decisions made by supervisors • Ensure staffing activities align with enterprise requirements – which are embodied in the policies and procedures and which, in turn, reflect the strategic goals and direction of the enterprise.

Identify internal factors that impact on staffing needs

Possible internal factors impacting on staffing levels:

- Labour budget
- Existing staff
- Service standards
- Trading hours

(continue)

Slide 21

Slide No	Trainer Notes
21.	Trainer states to trainees before staff are hired or dismissed there must be an analysis of internal and external factors impacting the business and the need for staff. Whenever staff are engaged or made redundant, there must be a valid reason for that action. Trainer explains this Section identifies internal issues within a business: • Labour budget – it is important to know: ▪ How much is available? ▪ Can more be spent on wages if revenue increases? ▪ Can more be spent next period if savings have been made previously? ▪ Can more be spent in one department if savings have been made in another department? ▪ What impact does a public holiday have on the money allocated to wages? Is extra money allocated to allow for payment of penalty rates? ▪ What is the wages period? A week, fortnight or other? • Existing staff: ▪ Who are they? ▪ How many are there? ▪ How many hours do they work? ▪ What can they do and not do?

	• Service standards: ▪ What do management expect and what do customers expect? ▪ What are non-negotiable requirements regarding staffing levels? For example, one waiter to every 15 guests; one Room Attendant for every 12 rooms to be cleaned; 'No customer should wait more than 30 seconds before being served' • Trading hours: ▪ When does the business open and shut? ▪ Can staff be 'staggered' at opening and closing times?

Slide

Identify internal factors that impact on staffing needs

- Volume of customers
- Peak demand
- Nature & type of customers
- The business itself

(continue)

Slide 22

Slide No	Trainer Notes
22.	Trainer continues to explain and identify internal issues impacting on staffing needs for a business or department: • Volume of customers: ▪ The aim should be to match the number of staff to the number of customers needing to be served. Proper staffing is often referred to as the 'art of having the right people, in the right place, in the right numbers, at the right time.' ▪ The aim of this focus is 'to serve the customer' as distinct from 'take money' ▪ In many cases, there will be a need for staff to be working even where no immediate revenue is generated, such as when: – Providing sales advice – which may or may not result in a sale – Promoting products and services – where the intention may be to raise awareness as opposed to generate sales – Providing service expected by customers as part of something they have already purchased – for example, security and maintenance is expected by customers when they buy an accommodation package but these departments do not generate revenue.

- Peak demand:
 - May occur on an hourly basis, certain days of the week, time of the month or year, or a particular season
 - Service standards must be considered – if a waiting time of three minutes before being attended to by a sales adviser is acceptable then the level of staff needs to reflect this rather than provide an 'immediate' service with no waiting
 - Low demand periods should reflect correspondingly reduced staffing levels – it is inadvisable to only consider 'peak' demand without identifying and responding to low demands times
- Nature & type of customers:
 - Issues to be considered in this regard include:
 - Safety – most businesses require a minimum of two staff after a certain time at night for the safety of employees
 - Whether alcohol is involved – where liquor service and consumption occurs this can indicate:
 - A need for more staff
 - A need for security staff
 - Age of customers – where young people are targeted there can be a need for more staff because:
 - They tend to spend more than other customers
 - They demand faster service
 - They tend to cause more problems in liquor venues
 - The potential for repeat business – where there is a chance the current customers will become repeat customers, venues tend to provide more staff to provide better service. Where customers are not expected to become repeat customers, there can be a case for the provision of fewer staff meaning slower service
 - Business people demand more prompt attention than other customers because their time is more valuable
- The business itself:
 - There is always a need to consider the business itself when identifying internal factors impacting on staffing. Important considerations are:
 - Directions the business wishes to take – this relates to departures from their past activities in terms of:
 - Target markets – different markets require different skill sets from staff
 - Service levels and standards – higher service standards generally require more staff and better trained staff
 - Services and products provided – an increased number or type of products and services requires staff with commensurate skills to provide them

	▪ The existing reputation and image of the business – in general (unless the business has set itself new directions, or been taken over by new owners) most enterprises will seek to maintain their reputation and image, meaning: – Great attention needs to be paid to monitoring changes in staffing levels to determine how these are impacting on customer perceptions about service delivery. Are customers still happy with service levels? Or have they noticed a drop in standards since one less staff member was rostered to serve them? – Special attention needs to be paid to staffing levels (and personnel) when new opposition businesses open up, and when existing competition businesses launch new promotional campaign. It is often at these times when existing customers can be persuaded to leave and try the other business, especially if they believe the service they have receiving is sub-standard.

Slide

Identify internal factors that impact on staffing needs

- Service offered
- Equipment used
- Promises made to customers
- Coverage of staff movement.

Slide 23

Slide No	Trainer Notes
23.	Trainer continues to explain and identify internal issues impacting on staffing needs for a business or department: • Service offered: ▪ The style of service offered can determine the need for certain numbers of staff or the skills they require. For example: – Plated service – is the most common service style where food is placed onto plates in the kitchen and carried to the tables by waiting staff – Silver service – is a high quality service style requiring more staff (and crockery, cutlery and equipment) where an empty plate is placed in front of the guest and food is silver served (using tongs or spoon and fork) from service trays onto the individual guest plates – Gueridon service – includes (but is not limited to) the cooking of dishes at the table and the silver service of vegetables, sauces and garnishes onto individual guest plates at the table – Smorgasbords or buffets – allow, or require, guests to serve themselves. This service style can require less waiting staff but may not be exactly what target market wants in terms of food service

	• Equipment used: ▪ There is a need to ensure sufficient suitably trained and competent staff to operate whatever systems, technology or equipment in use at the venue. Factors involved are: – The need for sufficient original training – and up-date training as required – The need to train sufficient numbers to ensure the systems, technology or equipment can be operated when required – The need for trained staff in order to meet: – Warranty and guarantee requirements – Compliance requirements – Safety and insurance requirements – The need for planned transitions – from existing systems, technology or equipment to new systems, technology or equipment, allowing time for staff to become familiar with new or upgraded items • Promises made: ▪ There must always be sufficient and competent staff to: – Keep promises made in advertisements about service offering – Enable contractual obligations to be complied with • Coverage of staff movement: ▪ There must always be plans in place to address expected staff absences (due to leave entitlements, training, rostered time off) and unexpected staff absences (such as illness, accidents at work, the need to transfer staff to another department).

Identify external factors that impact on staffing needs

External factors must be taken into account when considering staffing needs:

Areas to consider:

- The external business environment
- Customer expectations
- Emerging trends
- Changes in legislation & technology
- Availability of staff.

Slide 24

Slide No	Trainer Notes
24.	Trainer mentions to trainees external factors must also be considered when considering staffing needs explaining there is a need to look at: • The external business environment – see following slide • Customer expectations – covered on later slides • Emerging trends – covered on later slides • Changes in legislation and technology – covered on later slides • Availability of staff – covered on later slides.

Slide

Identify external factors that impact on staffing needs

Look at the external business environment:

- Evaluation & analysis of the competition
- The state of the economy
- Consideration of customer's countries and economies.

Slide 25

Slide No	Trainer Notes
25.	Trainer tells trainees when considering staffing needs they must always look outside the organisation. An important consideration is the external business environment in which the enterprise is operating in: • Evaluation and analysis of the competition – questions to be answered include: ▪ Is competition growing, staying the same or decreasing? ▪ What activities are being undertaken by the competition to increase their market share? – Are they cutting prices? – Are they advertising more? – Are they offering a better service or products? ▪ What does it appear needs to be done to combat this opposition activity? Is the answer really a staffing response (more staff, more qualified staff, more personable staff, more competent staff), or is the answer totally unrelated to staffing. Therefore other issues need to be addressed (lower prices, increased value-for-money, better inclusions in packages) • The state of the economy – taking into consideration: ▪ Local employment rates ▪ Availability of credit

	▪ Exchange rates ▪ Levels of disposable income • Consideration of the countries and economies of the countries from which customers are drawn. Where the enterprise relies heavily on revenue from international customers, the state of their currency and economy are important issues to take into account.

Customer expectations:

- Talking to customers
- Making 'Customer Comment' cards available
- Providing an online feedback option
- Using focus groups
- Paying attention to complaints & compliments
- Undertaking market research
- Observing customers.

Slide 26

Slide No	Trainer Notes
26.	Trainer states to trainees all businesses should strive to be customer-focused. All efforts should be concentrated on delivering products and services deemed by the customers to be important to them. Trainer highlights being customer-focused is a very marketing oriented way to do business. It requires the enterprise to engage in market research to help a business stay in touch with its customers and determine what it is they need – ways to capture this information from customers include: • Talking to customers – to get their input and feedback • Offer 'Customer Comment' cards for customers to complete – and encourage them to fill them in, and read them when they are submitted • Have a 'Contact Us' facility on the website • Use focus groups – to discuss targeted issues • Pay attention to complaints made and compliments given • Produce and administer questionnaires • Observe customers – look at their body language and listen to comments they make.

Slide

Identify external factors that impact on staffing needs

Emerging trends may indicate a need for:

- More or less staff
- Staff with different skill sets
- Staff at different times.

Slide 27

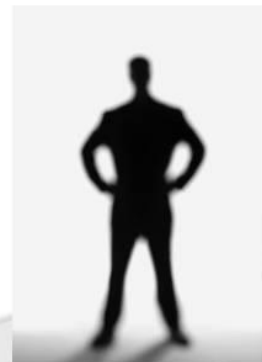

Slide No	Trainer Notes
27.	Trainer indicates to trainees they must be constantly looking to identify new and emerging trends in the marketplace so they can take advantage of opportunities highlighting many of these trends require: • More staff – or loess staff. For example, self-catering may allow fewer cooks or waiters to be hired • Staff with different skill sets – different skills, experience, knowledge and abilities • Staff at different times of the day – to meet differing customer needs at different times. Trainer identifies examples of recent trends: • Increase in international travel and tourism • Increase in frequent short holidays rather than a single, longer duration holiday • Increase in women who are travelling for business • Growth in new tourism markets – such as eco-tourism, action tourism, medical tourism.

Slide

Identify external factors that impact on staffing needs

Changes in legislation may mean:

- Need to train staff about new legislated requirements
- Need for staff to get licences, certificates or qualifications
- Need to update staff training
- Need for staff to provide proof of claims they have credentials
- Need to remove some staff from previous positions.

Slide 28

Slide No	Trainer Notes
28.	Trainer explains to trainees changes in legislation have the potential to impact on staffing as follows: • There can be a need to train staff about the new legislation – what it means to their everyday workplace responsibilities, what different compliance obligations are provided for, and how their work needs to change to comply • There can be a need for staff to obtain mandatory licences, certificates or qualifications • There may be a need for staff to update or refresh existing licences, certificates or qualifications • There may be a need for staff to provide evidence they have completed mandatory training courses • Staff who were previously employed in a legal capacity may need to be removed from their position – where legislation means their age prohibits them from working as a result of legislative changes, or their qualification is now deemed to be out-of-date or no longer recognised.

Slide

Changes in technology:

- Need for staff training, certification or experience
- Need for staff to be able to demonstrate new technology to customers
- Need to integrate new technology with existing technology.

Slide 29

Slide No	Trainer Notes
29.	Trainer explains to trainees changes in technology have the potential to impact on staffing as follows: • The need for training, certification and experience on the new equipment, technology or systems – this may involve: ▪ In-house training ▪ External training by a private training provider ▪ Arrangements with suppliers for them to provide on-site training and commissioning of the new system or equipment • The need for staff to be able to explain new equipment, technology or systems to customers – and help them use it • The need for integrating existing work practices into the requirements of the new equipment, technology or systems.

Where there is a lack of suitable, local staff:

- Advertise more widely
- Simplify tasks
- Offer more money
- Improve working conditions
- Work with authorities to grow the local pool of suitable staff.

Slide 30

Slide No	Trainer Notes
30.	Trainer identifies to trainees there is a need to consider the type and amount of suitable staff available to undertake the required tasks as and when required. Trainer explains when there is a lack of suitable local staff this may mean a need for trainees to: • To advertise for staff more widely – such as internationally or out of the local area • To simplify tasks – so less qualified or experienced people can undertake them • To offer more money – to attract suitable applicants • To improve working conditions – to make the workplace more attractive for the right staff • There is a need to offer more in-house training – to develop a body of suitable trained staff • A need to work with authorities, local employer bodies and agencies to: ▪ Promote vocational training ▪ Encourage people to engage with vocational training ▪ Offer more vocational training ▪ Facilitate the movement of trained, experienced and qualified people into the local industry.

Slide

Describe techniques to monitor workplace performance

You need to monitor workplace performance of staff to:

- Identify those who need help
- Help determine whether actual outcomes are person-based or related to other issues
- Identify good performance
- Identify staff who may be suitable for promotion
- Remind staff their performance at work is under scrutiny.

Slide 31

Slide No	Trainer Notes
31.	Trainer advises trainees the study of workplace performance is a field in its own right however it is important for them to monitor the workplace performance of their staff to: • Identify those who need help – or training or support • Help determine whether actual outcomes are person-based or related to other issues – such as poor layout, malfunctioning equipment, ineffective SOPs • Identify good performance – so it can be recognised or rewarded • Identify staff who may be suitable for promotion – or extra responsibilities or a new position • Remind staff their performance at work is under scrutiny – which encourages them to perform at their best.

Slide

Describe techniques to monitor workplace performance

Statistical analysis is commonly used to monitor workplace performance:

- Step 1: Determine 'expected' figures for labour
- Step 2: Calculate 'actual' figures
- Step 3: Compare 'expected' against 'actual'.

Slide 32

Slide No	Trainer Notes
32.	Trainer indicates to trainees 'statistical analysis' is a very common approach taken by workplaces to monitor staff performance, presenting the three basic steps used in this approach: • Step 1: Determine 'expected' (or 'projected') figures for labour – which may include consideration of a multitude of staff-related expenditures and associated issues such as: ▪ Wage costs – what will they be for the period under consideration (the forecast period). This occurs before the period in question occurs ▪ Training costs ▪ Uniform costs ▪ Number of staff employed and hours worked ▪ Number of staff achieving nominated licences, certificates or qualifications in a given period • Step 2: Calculate the 'actual' figures for the nominated areas – based on actual information and data. This occurs after the period in question occurs • Step 3: Compare 'expected' figures against 'actual' figures – to determine the extent to which targets were achieved and where the figures were above or below projections.

Slide

Describe techniques to monitor workplace performance

Labour cost percentage = the percentage of revenue that represents the cost of labour to generate those sales.

Formulae:
$$\frac{\text{Labour cost}}{\text{Sales}} \times \frac{100}{1}$$

Example:
$$\frac{2250}{8550} \times \frac{100}{1} = 26.3\%$$

Slide 33

Slide No	Trainer Notes
33.	Trainer explains to trainees the ability to calculate 'labour cost percentage' is vital for anyone with staffing-related responsibilities, identifying: - Labour cost percentage is the percentage of revenue that represents the cost of labour to generate those sales - The formulae for calculating labour cost percentage is: $\frac{\text{Labour cost}}{\text{Sales}} \times \frac{100}{1}$ - An example of calculating labour cost percentage – assume 2250 is cost of labour for the period; sales were 8550: $\frac{2250}{8550} \times \frac{100}{1} = 26.3\%$

Describe techniques to monitor workplace performance

In relation to labour cost percentage:

- If labour budget = 26.3% & actual labour cost percentage was 25%, this means you are 'under budget'
- If labour budget = 26.3% & actual labour cost percentage was 28%, this means you are 'over budget'.
- Cost rosters before using them.

Slide 34

Slide No	Trainer Notes
34.	Trainer provides information to trainees about labour cost percentages: • Identifying instances where labour cost percentages are 'over budget' and 'under budget' • Highlighting all rosters should be costed before being distributed to staff – to ensure they fall within allowable labour cost limits.

Slide

Describe techniques to monitor workplace performance

Where labour costs are too high/over budget:

- There may have been too many staff rostered to work
- Inefficient rostering
- Sales were below expectations
- Management has allocated insufficient labour funds
- May have been a 'workplace event'
- May relate to 'public holidays.

Slide 35

Slide No	Trainer Notes
35.	Trainer provides information to trainees about situations where labour cost percentages are too high/over budget. Possible causes are: • There are too many staff –all staff have started work at the same time instead of using 'staggered' starts, the estimation of staff numbers required were wrong • The way they are rostered is inefficient – staff are being paid excessive overtime or penalty rates because they are being asked to work hours outside those normally provided for • Revenue has not matched expectations – the business has not attracted the sales anticipated for the period in question • Insufficient allocation of funds for labour – in reality, the department or workplace may be under-resourced in terms of staff and the work they are expected to do and the standard they are expected to maintain • An unexpected workplace event – such as an accident, emergency, incident involving an injury to staff (meaning they have had to leave work) resulting in a situation where staff have had to be paid overtime or penalty rates • Public holidays – requiring the business to pay higher hourly rates to staff.

Slide

Quantitative & qualitative analysis compares 'hard' data with 'soft' data considering:

- Levels of absenteeism against different staffing levels
- Level of staff departing the organisation
- Complaints matched against staffing levels
- Wastage
- Damage.

Slide 36

Slide No	Trainer Notes
36.	Trainer explains to trainees 'quantitative and qualitative analysis' compares statistical data against soft data. This differs from labour cost percentage which is a purely statistical analysis. This style of analysis may consider issues such as: • Level of absenteeism compared to different staffing levels – asking questions such as 'Is the high workload when staffing levels have been cut causing staff to stay away from work?' • Level of staff departure – 'Are reduced staffing levels forcing staff to leave and go and work elsewhere?' • Type of customer complaints when staffing levels are varied – 'Is there a reduction in complaints or a change in the nature of the complaints when extra staff are employed?' • Wastage – 'is there more/less waste when staffing levels change?' 'Are different things wasted?' • Damage – 'What happens to levels and types of damage done to workplace equipment when staffing levels change?'

Slide

Describe techniques to monitor workplace performance

Basics of conducting a qualitative and quantitative analysis:

- Obtain baseline data
- Compare changes to baseline data when staffing levels change
- Determine 'cause and effect' results.

Slide 37

Slide No	Trainer Notes
37.	Trainer tells trainees the basics of conducting a qualitative and quantitative analysis are: • Obtain baseline data from the venue or department for a known situation – where staff levels, workload and revenue is known. This data should cover: ▪ Quantitative data – figures, statistics, percentages, totals, ratios ▪ Qualitative data – input as a result of discussions with staff and customers • Compare this data to data produced when staffing levels or the mix of staff changes (names of staff, age of staff, gender of staff, new staff and experienced staff) • Determine 'cause and effect' results – identifying how changes to staff levels impact workplace issues.

Slide

Describe techniques to monitor workplace performance

‘Benchmarking’ = identifying best practices & comparing them to what happens in the workplace:

- May be internal or external
- Provides basis for management action
- Can be used to monitor staff performance.

Slide 38

Slide No	Trainer Notes
38.	Trainer tells trainees benchmarking is the process of identifying the best practices and standards that apply to their industry, and comparing what happens in their workplace against that ‘benchmark’: • Comparing the workplace to world standards and practices = external benchmarking • Internal benchmarking refers to using the same approach but comparing current evidence against previous evidence from the enterprise, or against data from other properties in the chain to which the venue belongs • The results of the comparison provide the basis for remedial, or other action, as required so the organisation can attain the standard represented by the adopted benchmark • Benchmarking is very popular and effective as it is one way of judging the organisation against the reality of the marketplace, and against previous performance • Benchmarking could be used to monitor staff performance as follows: ▪ Comparing the number of rooms serviced by room attendants against the number of room serviced by room attendants in another venue ▪ Comparing the number of customers or tables served by the waiting staff at the venue against the statistics for service provided across the chain by Head Office ▪ Comparing the number or value sales made by staff against statistics released by an industry peak body or as a result of research by a government agency.

Class Activity – Guest Speaker

Trainer arranges for a suitable and senior industry person with experience at managing staff to attend and talk to trainees about:

- Their role and responsibilities
- How they obtained the job they now have
- How they determine staffing requirements for nominated areas for given times (covering internal and external factors they consider)
- How they establish and monitor staff budgets.

Slide

Describe techniques to monitor workplace performance

You may use formal or informal research:

- Make a conscious effort to capture feedback provided by customers
- Investigate matters relevant to staffing issues.

Slide 39

Slide No	Trainer Notes
39.	Trainer advises trainees they may also undertake formal or informal research to monitor workplace staffing performance. This technique requires them to do one or both of the following: • Make a conscious effort to capture feedback provided by customers – this refers to unsolicited feedback provided (for example): ▪ When talking with customers ▪ Overheard from guest conversations ▪ Provided on Customer Comment cards, or on the website ▪ In the form of compliments or complaints • Deliberately investigate matters relevant to identified staffing issues – this may include: ▪ Using focus groups to discuss service levels at different staffing levels ▪ Observing service delivery provided by staff at different staffing levels – to identify how changes in staff levels impact on interpersonal skills used by workers, the customer experience, delays in service ▪ Reading trade magazines and research reports relating to staffing and its relation to a variety of issues such as service standards, repeat business, customer satisfaction, staff or customer attrition rates.

Slide

Consult with stakeholders to determine staffing needs

You may need to consult with stakeholders about staffing needs:

- Owners
- Board of Directors
- Shareholders
- Senior management
- Supervisors
- Customers
- Suppliers.

Slide 40

Slide No	Trainer Notes
40.	Trainer states to trainees from time to time, it can be beneficial or necessary to consult with 'other stakeholders' in relation to staffing needs. 'Stakeholders' can include: • Owners • Board of Directors • Shareholders • Senior management • Supervisors • Staff • Customers • Suppliers.

Slide

Consult with stakeholders to determine staffing needs

Meet with owners:

- Regularly
- Because they have financial information you do not have
- Because they may want to remove a certain staff member
- Because they may want to move their business in a new direction.

Slide 41

Slide No	Trainer Notes
41.	Trainer notes to trainees many SMEs are owner-operated. It is often the owner who makes most of the operational decisions regarding the business. Some of these decisions are based on sound reason, facts and strategic thinking, and many others are based on simple personal preference or an individual desire to do something. Where trainees work for an owner-operator it is a sound plan to meet regularly with this person to share concerns and idea. A meeting once per week is good – a daily meeting is even better. Owners should be consulted in relation to staff because they may: • Know the financial state of the business and whether or not is can afford to hire extra staff – or whether it needs to shed staff • Have a personal desire to get rid of a certain staff member – and replace them with someone else they have identified • Have a plan to take the business in a new direction – which could implications for numbers of staff required, their experience and skill sets.

Slide

Consult with stakeholders to determine staffing needs

Consult with 'the Board' to:

- Understand strategic goals & plans
- Approve certain staffing plans
- Meet organisational compliance
- Communicate labour budget and related decisions.

Slide 42

Slide No	Trainer Notes
42.	Trainer tells trainees the Board of Directors ('the Board') has responsibility for the long-term performance and viability of the business. The day-to-day running of the enterprise rests with managers and middle level management. Trainer explains the Board of Directors should be consulted in relation to staffing needs because: • They will know the strategic plans, goals and objectives for the business – and staffing efforts must align with and support these. For example, they may be: ▪ Down-sizing the business because of concerns about the state of the economy or other considerations ▪ Expanding the business – on the basis of various identified opportunities ▪ Changing the positioning of the business in the marketplace – requiring a different approach in terms of staff attitude, experience capability ▪ Introducing new departments, products, services or facilities into the venue – requiring staff with different skill sets • They may need to approve certain staffing plans – after they have analysed them • There can be a requirement to make a formal presentation to the Board on nominated occasions – such as at all Board Meetings, specified meetings or the AGM

Slide

Consult with stakeholders to determine staffing needs

Shareholders may need to be consulted when:

- Significant staffing decisions are being considered
- Business image may be impacted by staffing decisions
- There is a staff issue with the potential to gain public attention.

Slide 43

Slide No	Trainer Notes
43.	Trainer tells trainees 'shareholders' may be public or private, explaining: • Public shareholders are those who have bought shares in the business on the Stock Exchange. It will never be trainees job to report to these people, or consult with them. The Board of Directors will do this • Private shareholders are individual who have a stake in the business – they are often family of the person who founded the business or friends or selected investors • Trainer states there may be a need to consult with these people when: ▪ Significant events relating to staffing are being considered – such as: ▪ Large scale redundancies ▪ Response to a major industrial relations issue ▪ Across-the-board pay rises ▪ Costly improvements to working conditions • The reputation or image of the enterprise is likely to be impacted by the staffing decisions being considered due to personal image and reputation • A staffing issue arises with the potential to gain external attention – and impact on how 'the public' regard the enterprise. This may be an unfair dismissal allegation, an allegation of harassment or an alleged breach of EO legislation and requirements.

Slide

Consult with stakeholders to determine staffing needs

Shareholders should be consulted because:

- Their investment is at risk
- They may have ultimate authority
- They may be able to suggest a better alternative.

Slide 44

Slide No	Trainer Notes
44.	Trainer suggests to trainees shareholders should be consulted because: • It is their money at risk – and they are therefore entitled to an opinion • They can have ultimate authority – to approve or reject proposed action • They may be able to provide valuable alternate insight into an issue – and contribute a different way of thinking throwing a fresh perspective on a topic.

Slide

Consult with stakeholders to determine staffing needs

Senior management may need to be consulted because:

- There is a policy requirements to do so
- They provide day-to-day direction & have day-to-day responsibility for the business
- They have good staffing experience
- They are readily accessible.

Slide 45

Slide No	Trainer Notes
45.	Trainer identifies for trainees senior management can include: • Department managers • Division or section managers • Nominated managers from Head Office • Supervisors are not senior managers. Trainer recommends to trainees senior management may need to be consulted over staffing needs because: • Enterprise policy dictates they must be consulted with – on nominated issues, or on a regular basis (say, every three or six months) • They form the nucleus of the group who provide direction for the day-to-day operation of the business – balancing the: ▪ Strategic goals and objectives of the business, and ▪ Day-to-day imperatives of the workplace • They usually have extensive experience in relation to staffing – either at the venue, elsewhere within the industry or at other properties within the chain • They are more readily available and accessible than the Board of Directors – but usually have similar knowledge and information that the Board does.

Slide

Consult with stakeholders to determine staffing needs

Supervisors should be consulted on staffing to:

- Enable them to make first-hand input on workplace issues
- Learn from their knowledge & experience
- Demonstrate intention to work cooperatively with them.

Slide 46

Slide No	Trainer Notes
46.	Trainer informs trainees supervisors may be regarded as middle-level managers. They should be consulted regarding staffing matters in their area to: • Enable them to provide first-hand and relevant information about: ▪ Workplace needs ▪ Service provision ▪ Allied issues not already considered –they may be able to show how reducing the hours of a certain staff member is likely to have flow-on, unseen impacts in other important areas ▪ Feedback from staff about staffing action – that has been proposed, or has been implemented • Learn from their knowledge and experience relating to the staffing topic being considered – most supervisors have an extensive working knowledge about the area for which they have responsibility • Demonstrate intention to work with them and include them in decision making impacting their staff – it is best to work with these people in a cooperative and collaboratively manner. In many cases, when a supervisor is convinced a staffing change is a good idea, they will convince their staff likewise. Unfortunately, the reverse is also true!

Slide

Consult with stakeholders to determine staffing needs

Staff should be consulted about staffing to:

- Identify suggestions for action
- Provide guidance for decisions
- Demonstrate respect for them
- Gain support for initiatives.

Slide 47

Slide No	Trainer Notes
47.	Trainer advises trainees workers are often the forgotten stakeholders when staffing decisions are made. Too many people make staffing decisions and then impose these on employees, on a take-it-or-leave-it' basis, and this is to be avoided. Trainer tells trainees staff impacted by staffing decisions should be consulted to: • Identify suggestions they have for action – arguably staff are best placed to identify staffing issues and make recommendations for how they can best be addressed • Provide guidance for the final decision – in terms of: ▪ How to effectively implement new ideas relating to staffing levels or changes to staffing ▪ When to introduce changes and new ideas ▪ Identification of potential problems related to change and how to overcome them • Demonstrate respect for them as a valuable resource – many businesses will state staff are their most important asset but do relatively little to demonstrate this orientation • Gain support for a staffing initiative – by explaining the proposal and explaining how it benefits staff (by making their work easier, safer; by saving resources; by providing increased job security, or potential for more hours, overtime or promotion.

Slide

Consult with stakeholders to determine staffing needs

Consult customers before a staffing decision is made:

- Talk to them & ask questions
- Be aware they may believe their suggestions will always be acted on.

After action has been taken, research & consult again:

- How satisfied are they?
- How has their spending changed?
- Any suggestions for future staffing changes?

Slide 48

Slide No	Trainer Notes
48.	Trainer instructs trainees that for some staffing considerations it can be useful to consult with stakeholders before or after making the necessary decisions. Trainer states before making a staffing decision (such as reducing or increasing staffing levels, hiring someone in a new role, training staff in nominated new skills): • It can be worthwhile talking to customers and asking them: ▪ What they want ▪ How the changes would impact on their relationship with the enterprise ▪ How the changes would impact their spending or attendance patterns • Always be alert to the potential customers to believe their contributions will be acted on once they have made them. Customers can become disappointed and resentful if what they contribute does not materialise into reality. In short, consulting with has the capacity to be counter-productive. Trainer further states after staffing changes have been implemented, customer can be re-interviewed to determine: • Levels of satisfaction – are they more or less satisfied? About what? Why? • Changes in spending as a result – are they buying the same or different things as a result of staffing changes? Are they spending more or less? Why? • Suggestions for further staffing-related change – what do they think needs to change to make things better?

Slide

Consult with stakeholders to determine staffing needs

Consulting with suppliers may occur to:

- Identify what is happening at other business
- Help with finding new staff
- Determine what workplace staff need to know.

Slide 49

Slide No	Trainer Notes
49.	Trainer tells trainees suppliers are rarely consulted in relation to staffing needs but may be contacted in relation to: • Identifying what is happening in other businesses – the fact suppliers deal with so many similar businesses means they can provide useful insight into what others are doing and not doing • Sourcing staff – to perform designated tasks. Staff who are dissatisfied often tell delivery drivers and sales representatives and these people can be effective in finding suitable staff • Providing information about what workplace staff (those who order stock, and deal with accounts) need to know – in order to facilitate a better relationship and smoother work flow between the business and theirs. Demonstrating willingness to work with suppliers usually means they will respond by being more willing to do likewise.

Slide

Describe staffing requirements & locate on organisational chart

‘Organisational charts’ show relationship between all positions, identifying:

- Who is responsible to who
- Official lines of communication
- Possible career paths
- Number of positions.

Slide 50

Slide No	Trainer Notes
50.	Trainer states to trainees an organisational chart (sometimes known as an ‘organisation chart’) is a paper-based or electronic document setting out the hierarchical relationship between all the working positions within the enterprise identifying: • Who is responsible to who – the ‘lines of authority’ • The official lines of communication within the venue – the ‘lines of communication’ • Possible career paths for people within the enterprise • The positions within the business – by title • The numbers of positions – some charts identify the number of identical positions and some do not. Charts may show six separate boxes for six food waiters or there may be one box stating ‘Food waiters (6)’.

Slide

Describe staffing requirements & locate on organisational chart

Organisational charts can be presented in three main ways:

- Top-down – the most common: managers at the top; supervisors in the middle; operational staff at the bottom
- Horizontal – with managers at the left, and supervisors & operational staff flowing the right-hand side
- Bottom-up – with managers at the bottom, supervisors above them, operational staff above supervisors and customers at the top.

Slide No	Trainer Notes
51.	Trainer tells trainees more about organisational charts advising: • Most establishments have a 'top down' organisational chart with senior management at the top of the chart and lower-level managers, supervisors and other employees shown below them. This is the traditional approach to creating organisational charts. It is arguably the most common • More modern thinking prefers the organisational chart to be a more 'equitable' in nature and features senior management on the left-hand side of the chart with lower-level managers, supervisors and other employees shown fanning out to the right-hand side. This indicates a less hierarchical approach to the business and intends to demonstrate the team-orientation to the operation of the business • Some business prepare an inverted organisational chart with senior management at the bottom of the chart and a pyramid of lower-level managers, supervisors and other employees shown rising up from them and showing 'Customers' at the top. This is intended to indicate that it is the staff who are the keys to the organisation and that management exists to support their endeavours – as opposed to traditional organisational charts.

Class Activity – Handouts

Trainer obtains a range of different organisational charts and different types of organisational charts and:

- Distributes same to trainees
- Discusses same with the reference to:
 - Positions identified
 - Relationships between positions
 - Terminology used
 - Number of positions identified
 - Lines of authority and communication shown.

Slide

Describe staffing requirements & locate on organisational chart

Organisational charts are imperfect because:

- They quickly get out-of-date
- Workers do not like being shown 'below' management
- Lines of communication are always compromised
- Lines of authority are not always obeyed
- They can never reflect the dynamic nature of the workplace.

Slide 52

Slide No	Trainer Notes
52.	Trainer explains organisational charts can be imperfect because: • Businesses often change their workforce structure but forget to update their organisational chart to reflect these changes meaning: ▪ It is often out-of-date ▪ People have little faith in something that is partially quite obviously wrong • Workers do not like been depicted as being below management – where a top-down structure is used • The lines of communication indicated by the organisational chart are always compromised – by the 'Grapevine' (see later slide) • The lines of authority shown on the chart are not always complied with – because adhering to them would take too long to make decisions that are required immediately • No chart can ever reflect the dynamic nature and personal working relationships that exist in any workplace – the lines shown on a chart can never illustrate the level of cooperation between two positions or departments.

Slide

Describe staffing requirements & locate on organisational chart

To make best use of your organisational chart:

- Determine department heads, managers & supervisors
- Identify who they have responsibility for
- Know who they report to & who has authority over them
- Find out if chart is current
- Obtain permission to amend the chart
- Revise & update when necessary
- Update documents containing organisational chart.

Slide 53

Slide No	Trainer Notes
53.	Trainer tells trainees to make use of their organisational chart effectively they need to: • Know who the department heads, managers and supervisors are – these are the key players to consult with and obtain advice and input from • Know the actual positions and people they have responsibility for – so personal knowledge is embedded in the reality of the workplace and does not simply exist as a disembodied and impersonal chart • Know who they report to and who has authority over them – in case there is a need to go above them for help or approval • Know if the chart is current – an out-dated chart is confusing and can be worse than no chart at all • Obtain permission to alter the organisational chart – never make changes unless they have been approved by the owner, senior management or the Board • Strive to balance responsibilities – try not to over-load one position with too many responsibilities or tasks on the chart. Prepare a draft first and be prepared to revise it • Revise and update the chart whenever staff changes are made – in terms of: ▪ Staff numbers – where these are listed on the organisational chart. It should be a standard rule staff numbers are shown somewhere on the chart

	▪ Names given to positions – existing positions can sometimes be re-titled ▪ New positions added to the chart ▪ Positions removed from the chart – including those where positions may have been combined • Making sure revised charts are: ▪ Included in Staff Handbooks ▪ Posted in required locations throughout the business ▪ Provided to management.

The 'grapevine':

- Informal lines of communication in the business
- Operates side-by-side with organisational chart
- Accept & recognise its presence
- Tap into it & use it.

Slide 54

Slide No	Trainer Notes
54.	Trainer provides advice to trainees about 'the grapevine'. The grapevine is the term used to refer to the informal lines of communication within a business. It is an effective informal network of communication that many believe is essential for success of any organisation: • The grapevine operates side-by-side with the formal lines of communication and allows staff to communicate informally with each other. It speeds up many essential communications and ensures no gaps exist in the formal structure through which excellent customer service, vital internal information, or communication may fall. Specific job descriptions may not show anyone or any position is specifically responsible for (for example) opening doors for customers but the grapevine will see this as necessary and ensure it gets done – all without management input ▪ As another example, there may be an emergency in the establishment. It would take too long for management to communicate with staff through the official lines of communication as shown on the organisational chart but the grapevine will pick up on the crisis, and deal with it instantaneously • An effective manager accepts the presence of the grapevine and learns to use it their advantage by tapping into it, using it and supplying it with information.

Undertake a job analysis of each identified position

Job analysis = gathering of all facts, details & information about a job & how it is done.

A job analysis is done to:

- Identify all the tasks & duties
- Define how all the above are linked
- Identify the skills, qualifications & experience required
- Peripheral but relevant issues authority limits, relationships responsibilities.

Slide 55

Slide No	Trainer Notes
55.	Trainer states to trainees a standard requirement to undertake a job analysis for every position identified on the organisational chart. A job analysis is the gathering all the relevant facts, details and information about a job and it is done to: • Identify all the tasks and duties – involved in carrying out the job in question • Determine and describe how all those tasks are linked together – and executed • Identify the precise nature of the skills, qualifications and experience – needed to do the job • Identify peripheral – but nonetheless vital issues – such as: ▪ Authority limits of the job – scope of authority ▪ Operational relationships between the job and other departments ▪ Positional responsibilities accompanying the job.

Slide

Undertake a job analysis of each identified position

Job analysis is important as it:

- It provides essential information required for job vacancy advertising and selection
- It forms the basis for the development of the Job Description & the Job Specification.

Slide 56

Slide No	Trainer Notes
56.	Trainer explains to trainees why they need to undertake a job analysis for every position highlighting: • Knowledge about the requirements of a job is critical to selecting the right person for the job – correct selection can never occur unless there is comprehensive and current knowledge about the job to be done. The job forms the basis of Key Selection Criteria for the job, which in turn forms the basis for recruitment advertising • The results of a job analysis forms the basis for creating a Job Statement –a Job Description and Job Specification combined.

Slide

Undertake a job analysis of each identified position

The job analysis must answer questions such as:

- What work does the position do?
- What are tasks, responsibilities and duties of the position?
- When is the work done?
- Where in the enterprise is the work done?
- What are the range of requirements a worker needs in order to do the job as required?
- What are working conditions of the position?

(continue)

Slide 57

Slide No	Trainer Notes
57.	Trainer encourages trainees to ensure the end result of any job analysis they undertake should give them comprehensive and current answers to the following: • What work does the position do? What are tasks, responsibilities and duties of the position? • When is the work done? Or when does it need to be done? • Where in the enterprise is the work undertaken? • What are the range of requirements a worker needs in order to do the job as required? • What are the working conditions relating to the position? Class Activity – Handouts Trainer obtains a range of job analysis documents and: • Distributes same to trainees • Discusses them • Highlights points of similarity and difference.

Slide

Undertake a job analysis of each identified position

A job analysis can be done by:

- Watching what happens
- Encouraging feedback from staff
- Talking to other supervisors

(continue)

Slide 58

Slide No	Trainer Notes
58.	Trainer teaches trainees there are several ways to produce an effective and comprehensive job analysis. Each option is easy to apply and does not require special knowledge or skills but there is a need for a genuine desire to obtain the necessary information. Trainer presents the following techniques for gathering relevant information stressing a combination of techniques always produces the best result: Personal observation • This involves watching the job as it happens and taking notes to record the duties and tasks involved • It sounds a very basic thing to do, but it is surprising how revealing this exercise can be because the nature jobs tend to change over time. Encouraging feedback from staff • This requires talking to staff to get their inside views of the task(s) involved. Questions should include: ▪ How has the job changed? ▪ What does the job entail now? ▪ What tasks have to be completed? ▪ How is time spent in the job today compared to previously? ▪ What skills and knowledge are needed to do the job well?

	• These questions may be asked verbally or answered may be captured using a question sheet which the staff are asked to reply to. Talking to supervisors and others within the management network • This entails seeking information from management level personnel about what happens in the department. Questions should address: ▪ What do they need from the department in terms of service and products? ▪ How do they depend on a department and what it produces in order for them to be able to do their job properly? ▪ What needs changing in order for there to be an improvement?

Slide

Undertake a job analysis of each identified position

- Considering 'best practice'
- Reading existing job analysis information
- Reading existing job descriptions & job specifications.

Slide 59

Slide No	Trainer Notes
59.	Trainer continues to present to trainees techniques for undertaking an effective and current job analysis: Considering 'best practice' • This means investigating industry-recognised or approved steps, procedures, and protocols seen as producing the best available result in terms of (for example) productivity, safety, waste elimination, service standards, speed or cost saving • Consideration of what currently exists elsewhere as best practice should address: ▪ What could/should change in the workplace in terms of what is currently occurring? ▪ What would be involved in making these changes (cost, time, resources, training)? ▪ How can these changes be implemented or introduced? Reading existing job analysis documentation • This is done to help determine how the current job has altered in terms of what is happening now • The previous job analysis gives a useful reference point, or baseline on which to evaluate the changes that have taken place in terms of the requirements for each position.

Reading existing job specifications and job descriptions

- These documents provide excellent detail regarding individual jobs for the purposes of comparison with what is currently happening
- See slides in following Section ('Prepare job specifications and job descriptions for identified positions') for more detail
- Two important points to bear in mind when deciding to use these as a means of undertaking a job analysis are:
 - They often do not exist – many job positions operate quite effectively within a venue without their being any formal job specification or job description for the role
 - Many are out-of-date – it is important to check when they were produced as it is common for the position to have changed significantly without any similar change to the job documentation.

Slide

Prepare job specifications and job descriptions for identified positions

A 'Job Statement' = a document combining Job Description & Job Specification:

- Not all businesses have them
- They may be called different names – PD; Person Specification
- Will provide a better understanding of the required job and person
- Lack of this knowledge usually results in the wrong person being selected for a vacancy.

Slide 60

Slide No	Trainer Notes
60.	Trainer tells trainees in order to gain a definite understanding about any position in the organisation it is imperative a current job specification and description are produced based on information identified in the job analysis. Trainer presents the concept of 'Job Statement' to trainees: • The Job Statement is a document combining the Job Description and Job Specification • Not all enterprises have a Job Statement even though they may have both a Job Description and Job Specification • The Job Description may be known as the 'Position Description' (or PD) • The Job Specification is also known as the Person Specification • When a comprehensive and accurate Job Statement has been developed the business will be in a much better position to determine what type of worker to recruit because there will have a much better understanding of what the job entails and the requirements needing to be filled • Lack of sound, comprehensive and current knowledge about a position means a business risks starting the recruitment process with only a vague idea of what it is the person is required to do and this is obviously not a good idea.

Slide

Prepare job specifications and job descriptions for identified positions

Job specification = details the human qualities required for the position & should contain:

- Title of the job
- Minimum level of education
- Specialised training required

(continue)

Slide 61

Slide No	Trainer Notes
61.	Trainer tells trainees the job analysis helps describe the type of person best suited to the job under consideration. It addresses the human qualities the best person for the job would possess. Following are examples of what might be contained in a job specification: • Title of the job – to ensure everyone can identify the job being talked about • Minimum level of education – what level of secondary, or tertiary schooling is required, if indeed there is such a requirement? What level of literacy or numeracy does the position demand? • Any specialised education or training – is there a need for a special Certificate or trade qualifications? Class Activity – Handouts Trainer obtains a number of Job Statements, Job Descriptions and Job Specifications for relevant labour divisions, and: • Hands them out to trainees • Identifies, describes and discusses documentation • Questions trainees regarding: • How accurate do they think they are? • What information do they contain that the trainees did not think they would contain? • Why is the information provided actually listed in each document?

Slide

- Work-related experience
- Personal attributes required
- Physical effort required to do the job
- Interpersonal skills required.

Slide 62

Slide No	Trainer Notes
62.	Trainer continues telling trainees about job specifications: • Work experience – is actual, practical work experience necessary? If so, where should this experience have been gained and how much of it should there be? Should the person have had a set amount of experience in a certain business, department, trade or establishment type? Must they be familiar with certain things, certain pieces of equipment, or particular brands of machines? • Personal attributes – is it important they have, for example, attention to detail? Must they be 'self-starters'? Must they be able to work unsupervised? Be reliable? Be prepared to work shift work? • Physical effort required – what degree of fitness or strength is needed? Is there heavy lifting? Will they have to spend time on their feet? • Interpersonal skills – our industry relies heavily on individuals who are 'people persons'. Does this job call for a significant amount of this ability? Class Activity – Individual Exercise Trainer: • Hands out several examples of Job Specifications (these may ones used in previous Class Activity) • Identifies several job positions relevant to the labour division • Allocates one position to each trainee

	• Asks individual trainees to prepare a sample Job Specification for the position they have been allocated – trainees may be given access to text books, internet and other resources • Assists trainees as required • Provides feedback on their finished Job Specification. Prepare job specifications and job descriptions for identified positions

Job Description = information about what the job is all about:

- Job title
- Location of the job
- Job responsibilities

(continue)

Slide 63

Slide No	Trainer Notes
63.	Trainer explains to trainees another important document to be produced to assist with staffing is the Job Description. These must be comprehensive, current and produced and updated on a regular basis. A Job Description identifies what the job is all about: • Title of the job – to ensure everyone knows the exact position to which the description applies • Location of the job – a description of the department where the job is located. In some properties this may include the actual address of the job. There may be an added indication as to whether the position is front-of-house or back-of-house • Job responsibilities – this lists responsibilities which attach to the job including: ▪ Occupational safety and health responsibilities ▪ Supervision of others ▪ Performing banking duties ▪ Being responsible for ordering stock ▪ Balancing registers at the end of trade.

Slide 64

Slide No	Trainer Notes
64.	Trainer continues explaining contents of Job Description: • Day-to-day duties of the job –it is a description of all work this position needs to do. Constructing this part of the Job Description will take a lot of time in order to determine the work requirements. The document should accurately reflect all the tasks the employee is expected to do in the course of their work. Examples include: ▪ Customer service ▪ Selling ▪ Cash register operation ▪ Stock-taking ▪ Pouring draught beer ▪ Tapping beer kegs and managing the cellar ▪ Stocking shelves ▪ Serving food ▪ Mixing drinks • Job title of the person the position reports to – this indicates who the position will be responsible to. This person should have had significant input into job analysis and subsequent construction of the Job Specification and Job Description • Number of people supervised – if the position is responsible to oversee the work of others, this section indicates the supervisory extent of the position.

Slide

Prepare job specifications and job descriptions for identified positions

- Equipment, technology, systems used in the job
- Output standards required
- Type of work measurement used for the work performed.

Slide 66

Slide No	Trainer Notes
66.	Trainer continues explaining contents of Job Description: • Equipment used – this varies enormously and can involve specifying a certain type of equipment • Output standards required –identification of what is expected of each staff member in terms of quality and quantity standards relating to their workplace performance. This also informs potential staff members of what will be expected of them and lets them know in advance how their performance will be assessed • Type of work measurement methods used – this may not be so much a concern of small businesses but critical where pay rises are linked to productivity, so it is clear exactly how productivity will be judged when it comes time to assess worker issues such as individual contribution to overall performance and determine associated matters such as pay rises, promotions, extra hours, further responsibilities and training. Slide 73

Slide No	Trainer Notes
73.	Trainer identifies for trainees the Performance Criteria for this Element, as listed on the slide. Class Activity – Discussion Trainer asks trainees questions regarding staff recruitment: • What does 'staff recruitment' mean? • How might a business recruit staff? What potential sources of staff are there for organisations to tap into? • How do businesses advertise for staff? • What is a 'recruitment agency? What do they do? How do they operate? • What is online recruitment? What experience have you had with it? • What do you think is meant by the term 'key selection criteria'? • What types of job advertisements have you seen in newspapers? Can you think of any that were particularly good or bad? Why did you think they were good or bad?

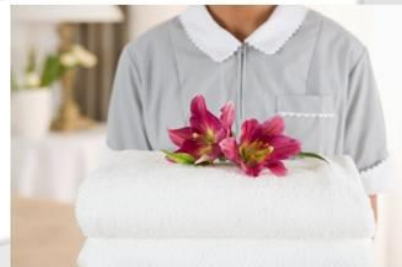

Slide

Identify & quantify positions to be advertised

Factor to consider when deciding jobs to recruit for:

- Information in Job Descriptions
- Integration of work to be done with existing staff
- Owner preference
- Complaints received from customers

(continue)

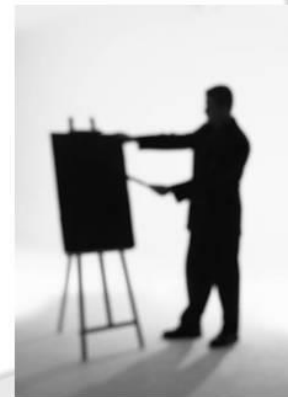

Slide 74

Slide No	Trainer Notes
74.	Trainer advises trainees all staff recruitment must be targeted to identify needs. The factors to be considered when deciding what types of jobs to recruit staff for include: • Information contained in the Job Descriptions – these are central to the decision and the primary tool to use • Integration of the required work to be done with other positions within the business to ensure: ▪ Seamless joining of new staff into the existing workplace and with current staff ▪ Optimisation of the use of equipment, time and other resources – the arrival of new staff should improve productivity and output rather than negatively impact it • Owner preference – in SMEs the business owner may have personal thoughts about staff required based on no other reason than a personal liking for a certain position • Complaints received from customers – where complaints have identified slow or poor service or products these are the areas to which attention should be focussed when hiring new staff.

Slide

Identify & quantify positions to be advertised

- Levels of business performance
- Strategic business direction
- New products or services
- Revisions to previous allocation of tasks to positions.

Slide 75

Slide No	Trainer Notes
75.	Trainer continues to provide trainees with topics needing to be considered when identifying types of vacancies to be advertised: • Levels of business performance – checking internal records can reveal positions where recruitment needs to occur based on indicators such as falling sales, decreasing traffic, reduced bookings • Strategic business direction – where, for example, the enterprise has decided to enter into the fine dining market there can be a need to recruit waiters with silver service skills, waiters with gueridon service skills, a sommelier or a maître d'hôtel • New products and services – for example, providing: ▪ In-room service of meals (room service) will necessitate hiring staff able to serve breakfast, lunch, dinners and suppers to guests in their room ▪ Five-star service may mean the venue has to engage the services of a Concierge, porters, dining room hosts, lifeguards at the swimming pool and doormen • Revisions to previous allocation of responsibilities and tasks – while these should be reflected in revised job descriptions and specifications this is not always the case. For example, where a business is under new management, or decides to re-structure its organisational chart, there can be a need to recruit staff for certain departments who are multi-skilled to give the organisation more flexibility and cost-effective use of staff.

Slide

Identify & quantify positions to be advertised

Factors to consider when determining number of jobs to be advertised:

- Service levels
- Peaks & troughs of trade
- Waiting times
- Trading times

(continue)

Slide 76

Slide No	Trainer Notes
76.	Trainer presents to trainees factors to consider when determining the number of positions to be advertised and filled: • Advertised and expected service levels – there is a distinct relationship between staff levels and the standard of service provided to customers. If the business venue advertises high-quality service it will charge accordingly and customers expect this to be reflected in actual service delivery • Peaks and troughs of trade – recruitment of extra staff for high-demand times is to be expected • Waiting times – sufficient staff will need to be engaged to ensure the maximum acceptable waiting times for service to customers is not exceeded • Trading times – the longer the business is open, the greater the potential for more staff.

Slide

Identify & quantify positions to be advertised

- Labour budget
- Organisational chart requirements
- Personal knowledge about the business, local area, upcoming events & historical data
- Contractual obligations.

Slide 77

Slide No	Trainer Notes
77.	Trainer continues to present to trainees factors to consider when determining the number of positions to be advertised and filled: • Labour budget – the link between staffing costs and revenue must always be a major consideration. No business ever has unlimited scope to hire and pay for staff • Statements made on the organisational chart – if the chart identifies twenty room attendants, then the maximum number who can be hired is twenty unless there is special dispensation from management to hire more • Personal knowledge about upcoming events –knowledge about other businesses in the industry, their activities, historical information, local events (business, sporting, religious) and customer demand on the venue at these times • Contractual obligations – where a business has entered into a contract with a customer, all promises made regarding type and numbers of staff must be met. Class Activity – Guest Speaker Trainer arranges for a senior industry person with experience with staffing matters to visit and: • Talk to trainees about their job, what it entails, what they do, who they liaise with

- | | |

| | <ul style="list-style-type: none">• Explain challenges their job presents to them with reference to actual workplace events• Discuss the factors they take into account when determining the type and numbers of vacancies to advertise• Identify others they speak with before a final advertising decision for job vacancies is made• Describe the options they use for advertising vacancies and sourcing staff. |

Slide

Develop key selection criteria for each position to be advertised

Key Selection Criteria (KSC or 'Selection Criteria'):

- Must be developed before advertising vacancies or interviews
- Must be based on Job Statement
- Must reflect the major requirements of the position
- They are non-negotiable requirements.

Slide 78

Slide No	Trainer Notes
78.	Trainer explains to trainees before interviews for positions are conducted, key selection criteria for the vacancies must be developed highlighting: • Key selection criteria (KSC) are also known simply as 'selection criteria' • During the job analysis, all the tasks involved in the position being analysed would have been identified – for every position these tasks could be classified as major tasks and lesser sub-tasks. The main tasks of the job will be used to determine the key selection criteria for the job. In effect KSC are the major elements of the position • KSC may include stand-alone requirements of the job or they can be a combination of Job Description and Job Specification information drawn together into a single statement. Other important aspects of the job can also form elements of the selection criteria, including: ▪ The need for a driver's licence for some jobs ▪ Need for a Responsible Service of Alcohol certificate ▪ Ability to work weekends and nights • KSC can be seen as the non-negotiable elements of the job, the requirements which must be fulfilled by anyone obtaining the job • When the candidates for the position are being interviewed, their applications should be judged by how well they measure up to these criteria. The better the fit between the applicant and the selection criteria, the better the chances of them getting the job.

Slide

Develop key selection criteria for each position to be advertised

KSC should:

- Be in writing
- Developed in conjunction with relevant others
- Shared with those who will interview applicants.

Slide 79

Slide No	Trainer Notes
79.	Trainer provides trainees with additional information about KSC stating Key Selection Criteria should be: • Put in writing – giving clarity for each position. It is not enough they exist simply in the minds of managers, owners or supervisors • Developed in conjunction with: ▪ Management and owners ▪ Supervisors – of the department where the employee will work and other allied supervisors ▪ Staff – impacted by the work the position does • Shared with the people who will interview job applicants – and make the decision about the selection of the successful job applicant for the job vacancy so they know what these minimum requirements are.

Slide

Key Selection Criteria:

- Vary between businesses
- Will address:
 - Competencies
 - Experience

(Continue)

Slide 80

Slide No	Trainer Notes
80.	Trainer continues advising trainees about KSC explaining: • The exact nature of the KSC will vary between positions and between enterprises • In general KSC will address: ▪ Competencies – these are the skills required to discharge the requirements of the position as identified in the job analysis ▪ Experience – which can be written to reflect the needs of the position in terms of, as appropriate: – Number of years experience – in an industry sector. Care must be exercised to ensure this KSC does not indirectly breach EO requirements (for example, a KSC requiring 20 years experience automatically excludes selection of people under the age of 40 years and thus is discriminatory) – Time using a nominated system, item of equipment or technology – Context – stating (for example) the successful candidate must have experience 'dealing with people', 'selling packages to corporate clients' or 'supervising waiting staff'.

Slide

Develop key selection criteria for each position to be advertised

- Qualifications
- Compatibility
- Form the basis of 'Interview Rating Sheets'.

Slide 81

Slide No	Trainer Notes
81.	Trainer continues advising trainees about KSC explaining: • Qualifications – detailing the formal credentials required for the position. These qualifications may be legal or internal requirements • Compatibility –the need for any new staff to integrate smoothly into the existing staffing arrangements and structure of the business. The ability of new employees to 'fit in' and 'get on' with existing staff cannot be stressed too strongly • KSC are also used as the basis for preparing Interview Rating Sheets. Class Activity (1) – Handouts Trainer obtains a number of KSC for a variety of positions and the job description (or job analysis documentation) on which they were based and: • Distributes same to trainees • Discusses and explains each KSC • Relates establishment of KSC to supporting job analysis or job description identifying why each KSC has been chosen as a KSC.

Class Activity (2) – Individual Exercise

Trainer:

- Hands out several examples of KSC and associated Job Analysis documentation or Job Description (these may be ones used in the above Class Activity)
- Identifies several job positions relevant to the labour division
- Allocates one position to each trainee
- Asks individual trainees to prepare sample KSC for the position they have been allocated – trainees may be given access to text books, internet and other resources.
- Assists trainees as required
- Provides feedback on their finished KSC.

Slide

Obtain authority to recruit staff

Authority to recruit staff for any business commonly rests with limited personnel:

- May rest with owner or manager
- You will have little or no authority when you start
- You will have to earn management/owner confidence
- To begin with you will always need permission to 'hire or fire'.

Slide 82

Slide No	Trainer Notes
82.	Trainer highlights to trainees authority to recruit staff rests with very few people in any enterprise. Sometimes only one person has the authority to permit the recruitment of staff. Trainer further explains to trainees: • As they progress in the industry, they will find they have an increasing amount of discretionary authority. This means there will be more and more things they are allowed to make decisions about without having to consult anyone else • They will have to earn the confidence of management before this happens – based on their workplace decisions and actions • They will never be allowed to make any hiring decisions early in their career – they will always have to seek permission to hire and fire staff.

Slide

Obtain authority to recruit staff

Approval to hire staff may be given:

- Only in verbal form – no supporting documentation necessary
- Only in written form – detailing the position & other key points.

Slide 83

Slide No	Trainer Notes
83.	Trainer informs trainees approval to hire staff may be: • Verbal approval only – this is common in most enterprises. It means there is no written authorisation given, at all • Written approval – a formal document identifying relevant key points: • The positions • Numbers of staff for whom recruitment permission is granted • Department recruitment applies to • Remuneration for each position for which authorisation is given • Timelines – for recruitment and selection.

Slide

Obtain authority to recruit staff

In order to obtain permission to hire staff you may need to:

- Discuss things with management
- Make a formal presentation
- Demonstrate compliance with workplace policies.

Slide 84

Slide No	Trainer Notes
84.	Trainer explains to trainees in order to obtain approval to hire staff they may need to: • Verbally discuss the need for staff with management – this may involve: ▪ Explaining why staff are needed ▪ Making recommendations about numbers, job types and sometimes suitable people to promote, hire or train ▪ Justifying and defending proposals made to management ▪ Detailing the costs involved – in advertising and labour costs • Make a formal presentation – identifying the need for identified staff • Demonstrate compliance with internal enterprise policies – in recruitment and selection activities.

Slide

Obtain authority to recruit staff

You must always comply with workplace recruitment policies, which may relate to:

- Requirements for approval for extra staff
- Requirements for approval for advertising remuneration in job vacancy advertisements
- Preferences in relation to the required profile of job applicants

(Continue)

Slide 85

Slide No	Trainer Notes
85.	Trainer states there is always a need for trainees to comply with enterprise policies in relation to recruitment. These policies may embrace: • Approval processes for additional recruitment –from senior management or Head Office • Approval processes in relation to advertised remuneration – some businesses steer away from specifying remuneration in their advertisements. Sometimes the salary range for supervisors, managers and executives may be advertised but hourly pay rates for bar staff, waiting staff, room attendants and other operational-level staff cannot be advertised • Required profile of potential employees – are management are prepared to employ trainees for a certain position or whether they want fully-trained and experienced staff. Some businesses have a standard orientation to new staff: ▪ Some say they want untrained staff so they can teach them the way their organisation operates, do not come with inherent bad habits or other baggage from previous employers. Where government provides a wage subsidy (plus other benefits) for trainee positions, this can be a significant factor in determining who is targeted for a nominated position ▪ On the other hand, some businesses will say they only ever employ fully-trained staff because this saves then time and money on training, plus they are 100% work ready when they arrive ▪ Another variation is to aim for a blend of new staff with experienced and fully-trained staff. Some workplaces will also aim for a gender balance, and a balance between different ethnic backgrounds to maximise the languages spoken.

Slide

Obtain authority to recruit staff

- Nature & content of job vacancy advertisements
- Nature & content of communication with job seekers
- Use of different media or options in the process of advertising for new staff

(Continue)

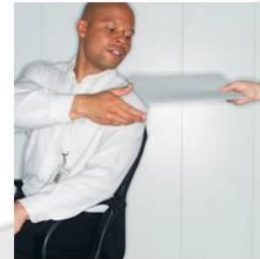

Slide 86

Slide No	Trainer Notes
86.	Trainer continues to provide information to trainees regarding the need to comply with enterprise policies in relation to recruitment, which may include: • Nature and content of job advertisements – some premises will insist their telephone number or even name of the business is not included in advertisements • Nature and content of communications with applicants – there is often a standard protocol for those wishing to apply for a job, and this is usually spelled out in the advertisements. Examples may include: ▪ ‘For more information, phone the Office Manager’ ▪ ‘For a position description, phone the Personnel department on ...’ ▪ ‘Those wishing to apply should forward three hand-written copies of a current curriculum vitae to the Head Housekeeper before close of business on Friday, 4th July’ • Use of different media in the recruitment process – establishments traditionally use the printed media (predominantly newspapers) whilst other businesses use a range of options. See next Section ‘Identify sources of staff’ for more detail on options.

Slide

Obtain authority to recruit staff

- Consideration of existing staff suitable for promotion
- Consideration of converting staff status
- People who will conduct the job interviews
- Nature of induction & orientation programs
- Role of personnel in the overall process.

Slide 87

Slide No	Trainer Notes
87.	Trainer continues to provide information to trainees regarding the need to comply with enterprise policies in relation to recruitment, including: • Promoting internally – a business may have a policy of recruiting for higher-level positions from within the company before any external advertisements or searches are undertaken. This policy can act as a motivator for existing staff and demonstrate there is a career path available in the organisation for employees who want to progress • Converting casual staff to part-time or converting part-time to full-time – as opposed to hiring new staff. Again, this policy provides existing staff with job security and demonstrates to workers management value them and are prepared to reward them for good work. Converting existing staff may also save time and expense associated with induction and basic training • Participants in interview panels – not all interviews are conducted using a panel format. Many industry interviews are one-on-one interviews between the department supervisor and the individual job applicant. Where interview panels are used it is common for the supervising manager to be on the panel together with at least one other staff member from the area under consideration. When panels are used, panels of two to three people are normal • Timing and nature of induction programs – these must be conducted early on, and will vary from a quick tour around the department, to a fuller, one to two day affair covering the entire premises. More on this on later slides • Role of different personnel within the recruitment, selection and induction process – these responsibilities may be shared within the one establishment or may be focused within the one individual or concentrated within one department.

Slide

Identify sources of staff

Each workplace will have its own preferences for recruiting staff based on:

- Their previous experience
- Cost
- Time.

You should align with existing preferences when you start advertising for staff.

Slide 88

Slide No	Trainer Notes
88.	Trainer tells trainees new staff may be recruited from a variety of sources. The preferred sources of staff are based on a combination of factors: • Experience – with what is effective and what is not. Every business has experience with what options have worked for them in the past. Businesses tend to re-use options that have worked in the past, and resulted in the hiring of good staff, quickly at an acceptable time and with minimum effort. This highlights many businesses tend to not pay sufficient attention to a critical aspect of staffing – the recruitment process • Cost – employers will seek to minimise the cost of recruiting staff • Time – most businesses will prefer to spend less time of staff recruitment than more time. Trainer emphasises to trainees when they start recruiting staff, they will be expected to conform with standard workplace practice in this regard.

Slide

Identify sources of staff

Media advertisements for staff:

- Most common option – newspapers
- Must be written to help screen applicants
- Radio or TV.

Slide 89

Slide No	Trainer Notes
89.	Trainer introduces trainees to options for sourcing new staff presenting media advertisements as the first option: • The most common media for placement of job vacancy advertisements are newspapers. These are usually local mainstream newspapers but can include international newspapers and smaller circulation local newspapers • Some premises will use a very brief two to five lines in the 'Situations Vacant' section of the local (regional) newspapers whilst others will place large, display advertisements prominently featuring the name and logo of the property. The more prestigious the advertisement, the larger the property tends to be • Care and attention should be taken with the construction and wording of job vacancy advertisements as they should assist in the screening process of applicants. For example, if a position necessitates night work this should be spelled out in the advertisement. If applicants must be able to speak English, this too should be mentioned • In rare instances a business may elect to use radio or television to recruit staff but these options are relatively expensive and tend only to be used when other avenues for recruiting staff have failed or there is an urgent need for employees • Businesses can also elect to advertise job vacancies in trade magazines.

Slide

Identify sources of staff

Recruitment agencies:

- Specialise in recruiting staff for a third party
- Government or private enterprise
- You need to tell them exactly what you want
- Refer suitable candidates for consideration
- It is your decision about whether to hire referrals or not
- A contract may need to be signed
- Fees for finding staff may apply.

Slide 90

Slide No	Trainer Notes
90.	Trainer presents trainees with information about job agencies and recruitment agencies as possible sources of staff: • These are businesses specialising in the recruitment of staff for businesses. They can be government-funded organisations or private enterprise operations • Most establishments will use the services of only one employment agency with whom they have worked with before and have demonstrated success • Most agencies will strive to develop an on-going relationship with any business using their services and are eager to identify and meet specific needs. There is a need to know what the business requires (in terms of staff required – refer 'Job Statement information and Key Selection Criteria information) and what specific workplace needs are • When dealing with these agencies they recruit and screen potential staff on behalf of the business, evaluating them against criteria provided to them by the business. They then 'refer' (or 'forward') applicants they believe meet specified requirements and are worthy of an interview • The final decision about whether or not to hire staff who are referred rests with the business. There is no obligation to employ anyone who is referred • Some agencies will require a contract to be signed before using their services, and some will not • Some government services may be free but commercial organisations will charge for their services

- Some agencies are industry-specific and others are general. Some agencies will specialise only in recruiting staff for the hospitality, food, travel business and no other industry type.

Class Activity (1) – Small Group Research Exercise

Trainer provides trainees with internet access and local/national telephone books and asks them – in small groups – to research possible recruitment agencies suitable for them to use.

Trainer suggest trainees visit http://www.jobcyclone.com/business_directory.php as a starting point for employment agencies that may be of use, or do a search on the web or in the telephone book for 'employment agencies' or 'recruitment agencies'.

Trainer checks the agencies trainees have identified and contributes relevant other agencies the trainees have not identified.

Class Activity (2) – Guest Speaker

Trainer arranges for a representative from a suitable recruitment agency to visit and talk to trainees about:

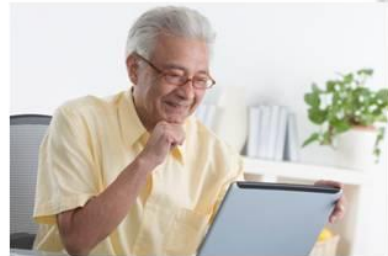

- Services provided to industry
- Fees and charges, if applicable
- Information the agency needs in order to recruit and refer suitable staff
- Guarantees about staff referred or hired
- What businesses can/should do to optimise the work the agency does on behalf of the business
- Documentation associated with the recruitment process and the relationship between agency and employer.

Slide

Identify sources of staff

The Internet can be used to source staff by:

- Advertising vacancies on the business's website – 'Vacancies', 'Careers at XYZ', 'Work with Us'
- Using online recruitment agencies.

Slide 91

Slide No	Trainer Notes
91.	Trainer tells trainees there has been an explosion in the use of the internet to recruit staff explaining: • Businesses often include a 'Work with Us' section on their website, advertising vacancies available and explaining how to apply • Alternatively there are several recognised and effective businesses operating on the internet – all require employers to register (and pay a fee) before lodging vacancies. Class Activity – Small Group Internet Research Trainer provides internet access to trainees and asks them to: • Find relevant industry websites featuring job vacancies on the business website • Find, and investigate the operation of, at least three online recruitment agencies. Trainer suggests the websites listed below (plus others as applicable to individual industries or geographic locations) as a starting point: • http://www.panpacific.com/en/singapore/offers/index.html?override_form=38 • http://www.asianjobsite.co.uk/ • http://www.orientpacific.com/goldrec.htm • http://www.escapeartist.com/jobs31/japan.htm • http://skorcareer.com.my/blog/15-popular-job-and-recruitment-websites-in-malaysia/2008/01/15/

Slide

Identify sources of staff

Internal sourcing of staff within the workplace may include:

- Talking to staff
- Posting vacancy advertisement in staff room
- Verbal mention at staff meetings
- Inserting advertisements into staff pay envelope.

Slide 92

Slide No	Trainer Notes
92.	Trainer states to trainees every business should be alert to the potential for recruiting employees from within their own organisation. There are many benefits associated with recruiting someone to a position who already knows about the company, its operations, terminology, practices and knows other staff, management and customers. Trainer informs trainees internal recruitment may include: • Speaking to individuals known to be interested or who have mentioned a desire to extend themselves or change roles • Posting an advertisement in the staff room • Mentioning the vacancy at staff meetings and briefings • Enclosing a copy of the job advertisement in pay envelopes.

Slide

Identify sources of staff

Consider using vocational training institutions as a source of staff:

- Talk to staff at the institute about your needs
- Can refer people with a demonstrated interest and skills
- Can help provide an ongoing pool of staff.

Slide 93

Slide No	Trainer Notes
93.	Trainer advises trainees many excellent staff can be sourced from training institutions specialising in their particular industry, or labour division: • Contact staff at the school and advise them of business needs – this can result in the school referring an excellent worker who has already demonstrated an interest in the industry and who will already have some necessary skills • Forming this type of working relationship can be mutually beneficial and is something many businesses strive to do in order to: ▪ Help train the next generation of workers ▪ Guarantee an ongoing supply of trained staff ▪ Give something back to their country and industry.

Slide

Identify sources of staff

Other sources of staff can include:

- Personal network of industry contacts
- Talking to workplace staff
- Considering people who have already registered for employment
- Career fairs.

Slide No	Trainer Notes
94.	Trainer explains to trainees further sources of staff may be: Personal networks of industry contacts • This involves using personal industry network to help identify potential applicants • As experience builds in the industry more contacts will be developed who can assist in identifying individuals who are looking for work • Never be shy about contacting these people and advising them of needs • The industry frowns on one business 'poaching' staff from another business. Talking to workplace staff • This is allied to 'internal advertising' but different • It means: ▪ Talking to in-house trainers – and asking them to identify staff with the potential to undertake work for positions where vacancies exist ▪ Talking to other supervisors – to see if they have staff who may be suitable, and looking for, a change in position ▪ Observing staff – to identify possible applicants based on their workplace performance ▪ Analysing workplace performance assessments – where formal staff assessments are conducted in the workplace, the documentation associated with these can indicate potential applicants.

Considering those who have already registered for work

- Many enterprises encourage people who are looking for work to complete a standard application form for work even where no identified vacancy exists
- These forms are then kept on file and used/referred to as a staffing source when workers are required
- Some businesses also retain applications of those who applied for vacancies in the past but were unsuccessful in gaining a job.

Participating in career fairs

- Some businesses participate in regular trade or career fairs as a means of recruiting staff. These fairs are commonly aimed at school leavers but also attract interest from the general public, both those who are unemployed and those seeking a career change
- Much planning is required for these to be successfully used as a recruitment tool and there is, of course a significant expense incurred for participation: booths/stands have to be manned, advertising (including the event packages) have to be prepared and the overall image of the establishment has to be maintained
- Use of career fairs as a recruitment tool is ineffective as a short-term recruitment solution because most of these events have quite long lead-times (up to six months), however they can be very useful as part of an overall recruitment strategy seeking to actively seek out job applicants and keep the name of the establishment in the minds of job seekers
- Some recruitment agencies will act as agents at career fairs – for a fee, they will promote an establishment as an employer and answer questions and register applicants on their behalf
- Careers fairs can be industry-specific or generic, and frequently feature employment agencies, schools and various government bodies. They usually feature career advice, tips on how to apply for jobs, writing applications and CVs, interview techniques and how to gain work experience
- Online 'career fairs' have also become popular.

Class Activity – Internet Research

Trainer provides access to the internet and visits <http://www.careersfair.com/> as an example of what is available and what is offered asking trainees to:

- Identify upcoming items of interest
- Identify how to register interest
- Identify costs associated with participating
- Identify what they believe they would need to arrange in order for a business to effectively participate in a career fair to optimise its use as a source of new staff.

Effective recruitment through media or recruitment agencies:

- Relies on providing sufficient & appropriate information
- Needs to align with the public image of the business
- Often requires management approval before action is taken.

Slide 95

Slide No	Trainer Notes
95.	Trainer indicates to trainees the effective recruitment of staff through the media and recruitment agencies: • Is based on the provision of suitable advertisements or information to them • Must reflect business image – and align with how the company wants to project itself in public • May require advertisements and engagement with recruitment agencies to be authorised by management – before any action is taken or commitments made.

Consider the following when writing a job advertisement:

- Include business name or contact details?
- Include address or telephone number?
- Put in job title & Job Description
- Outline of ideal applicant

Slide 96

Slide No	Trainer Notes
96.	Trainer highlights for trainees points to consider when writing a job advertisement include: • Business name and contact details – check with the business first however because some establishments prefer not to advertise their name as it can cause too many calls to be made to the premises • Businesses may want to include the address and telephone number – or there may be a requirement not to do so • Job title and job description – providing a brief outline of the tasks required to be carried out. This may need to be highlighted as it is often the element of the advertisement that attracts the attention of potential applicants • Description of the ideal applicant – this must be based on the job description and detail experience, skills, personal qualities and qualifications. It is important this is an accurate and honest depiction of what is required as it enables the advertisement itself to screen out inappropriate applicants.

- If 'application tips' are available
- Closing date for applications.

Slide 97

Slide No	Trainer Notes
97.	Trainer continues to present points to consider when writing a job advertisement: • The basis on which the person will be employed – permanent or casual, full-time or part-time. If there are a set number of hours per week this should be included. If there is the potential for overtime it is good to include this too • Benefits of the job – this will depend sometimes on the position being advertised. Some establishments only include this information for management level jobs. Information that might be included may relate to pay rates, flexible hours, free parking, employee discounts • Indication of how to apply – as and where appropriate give contact details including name of person to contact, a telephone number, fax number, email address or postal address. Indicate whether or not the applicant is to telephone or write for an application form • Tell applicants if the selection criteria are available to them and indicate if hand-written or computer-generated applications are required • Some organisations also offer tips on applying for positions with the company • Closing date for applications.

Class Activity – Handouts

Trainer assembles a wide range of newspaper job vacancy advertisements relevant to the trainee cohort and:

- Distributes and discusses them
- Asks trainees to evaluate them from the point of view of a person seeking employment:
 - How good or bad are they?
 - Do they provide enough information?
 - What extra information should have been included?
 - Which adverts seem most effective and why?
- Highlights the media used
- Examines the days of the week the advertisements are lodged.

Slide 99

Slide No	Trainer Notes
99.	Trainer continues to provide trainees with tips on writing job vacancy advertisements: • Do not waffle – stick to the necessary points. Do not load the advertisement with irrelevancies • Consider alternative ways for applicants to respond – options include: ▪ Paper-based application form – useful where it is important for applicants to have good hand-writing ▪ Online application form – at company website ▪ Hand-deliver application ▪ Post applications – to designated address, agency or box number ▪ Fax application through to given number or agency • Sell the benefits of the job – highlight pay and conditions • Point to additional information available – tell people where they can go or what they should to obtain (where available) KSC, tips on applying, website for the organisation. - Find out budget available for advertising
- Have your advertisement proof-read by someone else
- Make application forms available.

Slide 100

Slide No	Trainer Notes
100.	Trainer identifies for trainees additional points to consider when advertising job vacancies: • It is also important to check with the source to be used to identify any special requirements they may have: common requirements can relate to size, terminology allowed, time by which advertisements have to be lodged, quality of the finished product, use of company logos • Check with management to determine how much money is available – for the placement of advertisements. This can dictate the medium to be used, the placement of the advertisement in that medium, how many times it runs and the size of the advertisements • It is always worthwhile getting someone else to proof-read any job vacancy advertisement – to ensure its accuracy and identify whether or not any important information has been omitted • Create and make application forms available – at the reception desk, via phone or fax or on the Internet. Class Activity – Group Research Trainer provides internet access to trainees and asks them to: • Find examples of online application forms relevant to the industry type of the trainee cohort • Visit http://www.vibehotels.com.au/default.asp?page=/about-vibe/careers-at-vibe-hotels/employment-application-form to view an example of an online application form relevant to the hospitality industry.

Legislation may impose an obligation to:

- Comply with EO requirements
- Mention flexible working arrangements available
- Avoid age discrimination

(continue)

Slide 103

Slide No	Trainer Notes
103.	Trainer emphasises it is necessary for them to identify and become familiar with the specific legal obligations imposed on employment advertisers. Job vacancy advertisements should: • Make it clear all people with the right skills, qualifications and experience will be considered for the position – thereby indicating compliance with EO requirements • Mention any flexible working arrangements in place or that will be considered for the right person – to highlight preparedness to hire mature age people, working parents and care-givers • Avoid words such as 'young' and 'mature' as well as specifying age ranges or limits are unlawful – so the wording of the advertisement is age-neutral. If looking for mature age workers, consider replacing the terms 'senior' or 'mature person' with 'experienced', or 'able to work unsupervised'. Class Activity – Guest Speaker Trainer arranges for a relevant recruitment agency to attend and: • Identify local legislation to be complied with when advertising job vacancies • Distribute information sheets and similar providing advice on how to prepare a legally compliant job vacancy advertisement • Lead trainees on a guided tour of their website.

Trainer continues identifying to trainees the possible legal issues they need to comply with when writing a job vacancy advertisement: • Avoid any reference to race, religion, marital & parental status or other personal characteristics – focus the advertisement on the specific skills and qualifications required • Include a statement such as 'we are an age-friendly organisation' or 'people of all ages are encouraged to apply' – to demonstrate there is no age-based discrimination • Contain gender-neutral terminology –for example use 'Supervisor' instead of 'Foreman', use 'Room Attendant' instead of 'House Maid' and use 'Waiting staff' instead 'Waitresses'. Class Activity – Individual Exercise Trainer identifies a range of job positions relevant to the trainee cohort and: • Allocates one per trainee • Asks them to write an effective job vacancy advertisements suitable for placement in the local newspaper • Provides feedback on the advertisements created.

- File application & interview documentation.

Slide No	Trainer Notes
110.	Trainer identifies for trainees the Performance Criteria for this Element, as listed on the slide. Class Activity – Discussion Trainer asks trainees questions regarding staff interviews asking questions such as: • What experience have you had with job interviews? • What is meant by the term 'short-listing'? • What are 'references' and how do they differ from 'referees'? • Why would a workplace check references and referees of job applicants? • What is meant by a 'panel interview'? • What testing procedures might be associated with interviewing and selecting staff? Why might these tests be applied? • Why would a business file job application documentation and interview documentation? What might be included in terms of these documents? How and where might they file this documentation?

Slide

Accept job applications

Once a vacancy has been advertised :

- Expect applications immediately
- Expect calls & queries from job-seekers & recruitment agencies
- Accept & file the applications.

Slide 111

Slide No	Trainer Notes
111.	Trainer introduces this part of the course to trainees stating when advertisements for positions have been lodged there will be a need to accept applications for those vacancies advising: • After advertisements have been lodged with the media, and after vacancies have been listed with recruitment agencies applications will begin to arrive – the arrival of applications can be almost immediate • Expect a regular stream of telephone calls and queries in relation to the position being advertised – expect these even where advertisements have not given the name of the business or provided a contact telephone number. Many job applicants can work out where a job vacancy is located by ‘reading between the lines’ of the advertisement: ▪ Expect calls from potential applicants – seeking more information ▪ Expect calls or queries from recruitment agencies – wanting clarification of issues raised by applicants • After responding to questions, the primary aim of this stage in the recruitment process is to accept all incoming applications.

Slide

Accept job applications

When taking applications:

- Understand good applications can arrive by alternate means
- They should be recorded
- Applications can be processed 'as they arrive' or when 'closing date' for applications arrives

(Continue)

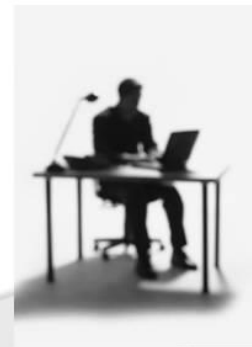

Slide 112

Slide No	Trainer Notes
112.	Trainer provides trainees with advice regarding taking applications: • Despite clear and obvious instructions about applications – for example, that they must be mailed in • Many applicants will hand-deliver their application where they believe their actual personal appearance may positively influence a hiring decision • Sometimes, all applications not complying with stated application requirements to the letter are rejected out-of-hand. This is an understandable approach (“Can’t they even follow simple instructions?”), but it may mean very good people are overlooked • It is a good practice for all applications to go to a central point for ease of administration and in order to facilitate the keeping of records about who, and how many, have applied • A simple register of applicants should be used – to record who has applied, how they applied, and when they applied. A ruled up exercise book with suitable headings or an electronic document is all that is needed • When the closing date arrives, all the applicants can then be processed. Normally applications are assessed more or less as they arrive. This initial processing simply means assessing every application to ascertain whether or not the person actually matches the selection criteria. It is not unknown for people with little or no alignment with stated experience or qualifications to nonetheless apply: if they do measure up, their application passes to the next stage ('short-listing').

Slide

Accept job applications

- Unsuitable applicants can be rejected at this stage
- A 'Letter of Thanks and Regret' should be sent
- Some businesses also return applicant's CV
- Some businesses retain all applications.

Slide 113

Slide No	Trainer Notes
113.	Trainer continues to advise trainees regarding the accepting of job applications stating: • If an application does not meet the basic requirements, it is rejected at this stage and a letter of 'Thanks and regret' is sent to the applicant. The sooner this is done, the better. A letter of 'Thanks and Regret' thanks the applicant for applying but regrets in this instance their application is unsuccessful. Sending these letters to unsuccessful applicants is sound business practice and also assists in PR for the venue • Some businesses will also send back the actual application, including résumé – check what applies in the workplace • Some businesses will retain the application and keep it on file for future reference – especially where the applicant is deemed to be suitable for other work • Applications may also be kept on file in case: ▪ The person selected for the position does not accept the offer ▪ Extra staff for the same position (or similar) are required. Class Activity (1) – Handout Trainer obtains a sample Letter of 'Thanks and Regret' and: • Shares with trainees • Discusses contents of the letter explaining the purpose of each paragraph • Asks trainees for their feedback on the letter.

Class Activity (2) – Individual Exercise

Trainer provides trainees with basic details of an applicant who has been deemed unsuitable for a job and asks trainees to draft a Letter of Thanks and Regret to send to this person.

Slide

Short-list applicants

‘Short-listing’ = the process of developing a list of applicants who will proceed through to the interview stage of the selection process:

- Not all suitable applications are short-listed
- Determining who will be short-listed may involve:
 - Reading ‘Covering letter’ of application
 - Brief reading of CV
 - Brief reading of application form.

Slide 114

Slide No	Trainer Notes
114.	Trainer explains to trainees short-listing applicants is the process of developing a list of applicants who will proceed through to the interview stage of the selection process, advising them”: • Applicants may pass an initial screening but still not make it to the short-list • Practices for short-listing may involve (depending on the position involved): ▪ A brief reading of the Covering Letter sent in by the applicant – to gauge their suitability and gain an overview of their experience ▪ A brief reading of their CV – to determine the extent to which their experience, qualifications and other relevant factors meet the key selection criteria for the position ▪ A brief reading of the business ‘Application form’ – where such a document is required to be completed by applicants.

Slide

Short-list applicants

Brief reading of 'accompanying documentation':

- Update the application register
- File applications
- Senior positions receive more attention in this process.

Slide 115

Slide No	Trainer Notes
115.	Trainer continues to identify for trainees activities involved in short-listing applications: • A brief perusal of accompanying documentation – such as references and copies of certificates • Updating the register applicants – to identify applicants who have been rejected at this stage • Filing suitable applications – for later use in the interview process. • In reality, the more senior the position, the more extensive the short-listing activities are likely to be.

Slide

Short-list applicants

You may also need to:

- Contact the applicant in-person to:
 - Obtain more information
 - Clarify an ambiguous point in their application
- Contact the recruitment agency – for extra information & their impression about an individual candidate.

Slide 116

Slide No	Trainer Notes
116.	Trainer informs trainees in some cases there can also be a need to undertake other activities as part of the short-listing process: • Contact a potentially useful applicant – to seek more information • Contact the applicant – to clarify something in their application • Contact the recruitment agency – to obtain different information and to capture their impression about the applicant.

Slide

Short-list applicants

Successful applicants who have been short-listed will need to be advised of interview details.

Unsuccessful applicants will have 'Letter of Thanks & Regret' sent to them.

Slide 117

Slide No	Trainer Notes
117.	Trainer advises trainees following short-listing: • Successful applicants will need to be advised of interview date, time and location – or one will need to be negotiated with them. More on this on later slides • Unsuccessful applicants may have a Letter of Thanks and Regret sent to them – as previously identified • Files will be updated – to reflect those who have been short-listed and rejected, and to identify interview date and time.

Slide

Check references & referees

‘References = written testimonials about the applicant provided by those who know the applicant:

- Usually typed on letterhead
- Contain:
 - Date
 - Name & position of person writing the reference
 - How long person has known applicant
 - Details of their character & reliability.

Slide 118

Slide No	Trainer Notes
118.	Trainer tells trainees references are written testimonials about the applicant provided by those who know the applicant. This can include past employers, previous co-workers, community leaders, religious people or club officials: • References are usually type-written and presented on letterhead paper as a way of proving they are written by the person providing the reference • References usually contain details and information about: ▪ Date when reference was written ▪ Name and position of the person writing the reference ▪ How long the person has known the applicant ▪ Their character and reliability – making statements about their hard-working nature, how well they performed their job, and how sorry the previous employer was to see them leave • These comments may be work-related or social (remember those applying for their first job will not be able to provide work references because they have not held a job before).

Class Activity – Handouts

Trainer obtains a selection of references (with names of people blocked out) and:

- Distributes them to trainees to read
- Asks trainees their opinions about them – what do the references tell them about the person?
- Points to the fact there is never a bad reference – they are all written in glowing terms.

Slide

Check references & referees

‘Statement of Employment’:

- Some employers will not provide a reference – only a Statement of Employment detailing basic information:
 - Employee name
 - Employer name
 - Position/s held
 - Start & finish dates.

Slide 119

Slide No	Trainer Notes
119.	Trainer introduces trainees to concept of ‘Statement of Employment’ stating: • Some businesses refuse to provide ‘references’ to employees as a SOP – this means they do not provide written references for any staff members • Such businesses will only provide a ‘Statement of Employment’ which is a pro forma document giving only basic information about the employee and providing no individual/personal information at all – the Statement of Employment will simply provide: ▪ Employee name ▪ Employer name ▪ Positions held by the employee ▪ Time period employed in each position. Class Activity – Handouts Trainer obtains a selection of Statements of Attainment (with names of people blocked out) and: • Distributes them to trainees to read • Highlights differences between these and written references • Asks trainees why employers may elect to only write Statements of Employment for ex-employees rather than References.

Possible answers

- Writing references takes too long
- They can be difficult to research and write
- As written documents they could be used by the ex-employee as the basis for legal action (libel).

Slide

Check references & referees

'Referee' may be:

- Someone who has written a reference
- Someone prepared to speak on behalf of an applicant but who has not written a reference.

Slide 120

Slide No	Trainer Notes
120.	Trainer explains to trainees referees may be seen as: • Anyone who has provided a written reference • A person who has not written a reference but is prepared to speak to a prospective employer about the applicant. Trainer tells trainees many people will not provide a written reference but are happy to be referees because: • They do not know how to write a reference or do not know what to put into one • They are too busy to do so • They have nothing positive to say about the person who has asked for a reference.

Slide

Check references & referees

Checking references means contacting the person who has written a reference.

Checks may be undertaken:

- Before interview
- After interview.

Slide 121

Slide No	Trainer Notes
121.	Trainer states to trainees to check references or referees. This involves contacting the people who have been listed on the resume as referees or those who have provided a written reference. These are checked: • Before interview as part of the short-listing process – to determine whether or not some applicants are worthy of an interview or not • After the interview – to help determine the selected applicant from all those deemed suitable. Doing checks at this point reduces the number of checks that have to be made and the time taken in checking references.

Slide

Check references & referees

References & referees must be checked:

- To make sure references are genuine
- To check if all the positive statements are, in fact, true
- To verify claims made by the applicant.

Slide 122

Slide No	Trainer Notes
122.	Trainer stresses it is important for trainees to check references and referees because: • Modern technology has made it easy for computer literate applicants to generate false reference documentation – there is therefore a need to be able to: ▪ Verify the applicant has worked for the organisation stated ▪ Validate they have performed the roles they have claimed ▪ Validate claims made about their ability or experience • No-one has ever written a bad reference – all references seem to speak in glowing terms about the applicant. As the old saying states 'No-one has read a bad reference'. This check enables discussion person-to-person with the individual who wrote the reference – and they are often more honest and forthcoming when questioned directly about the person in question • There is a need to be able to verify with the referee: ▪ Statements made in written references ▪ Claims made by the applicant.

Slide

Check references & referees

Check what applies in your workplace:

- Not all employers will do any of these checks
- Some businesses will only check written references
- Some businesses will check references & referees
- All applications should have either references or referees checked.

Slide 123

Slide No	Trainer Notes
123.	Trainer advises trainees different workplaces have different approaches to reference and referee checks: • Not all employers will check references or referees – they may believe it takes too long to do, or they may feel it will not be of any benefit • Some businesses will only check written references – that is, they will contact the person who wrote the reference • Some businesses will check both written references and those people included as 'verbal' referees • All applications should have either references or referees checked – checking both is preferable but not always possible for example, a referee may be overseas, they may have left the job where they wrote the reference or they may have passed away.

Slide

Check references & referees

When checking references/referees:

- Use the telephone
- Identify yourself to the referee
- Explain purpose of call
- Thank them for their time & assistance.

Slide 124

Slide No	Trainer Notes
124.	Trainer advises trainees when checking references and referees: • Telephone contact is the most useful and effective method to use • Identify self by name, position and explain purpose of call them – it is standard practice for applicants to advise referees they have used them for a job application, so they should be expecting a call • Enquire if they are prepared and have the time to answer some questions about the applicant • Thank them for their time.

Slide

Check references & referees

When checking references/referees:

- Plan questions before contact
- Ask lots of questions
- Record responses.

Slide 125

Slide No	Trainer Notes
125.	Trainer identifies to trainees checking references and referees requires: • Generation of questions to reflect what needs to be clarified, verified or validated about the applicant – these questions need to be prepared before the telephone call • Many questions to be asked such as: ▪ What was the applicant's work ethic like? ▪ Were they punctual, reliable, honest? ▪ Did they get on well with other staff? ▪ Did they get on well with customers? ▪ Why did they leave? ▪ Were you sorry to see them go? ▪ Would you employ them again? • Recording responses given by referees when asked the questions – to make sure nothing important is forgotten.

Slide

Notify applicant of interview

When advising applicants they have been granted an interview:

- Do so as soon as possible
- Contact them using approved method:
 - Telephone – most common
 - Email
 - Fax – to home address.

Slide 126

Slide No	Trainer Notes
126.	Trainer tells trainees all applicants short-listed for a position will need to be contacted so a date and time for interview can be arranged emphasising: • Notification should take place as soon as possible -= in case applicant takes another job • Contact should be via method approved by the workplace – telephone is most common and effective as it enables person-to-person communication, is quick and inexpensive. Other options may include email, fax or face-to-face.

Slide

Notify applicant of interview

Notifying an applicant about an interview should address:

- Date & time
- Location
- What they should bring with them
- Duration of interview
- Interview format.

Slide 127

Slide No	Trainer Notes
127.	Trainer advises trainees notifying an applicant about an interview should address: • Date and time of the interview • Location – where the interview will take place. This may include a street address, a floor number or even a specific room name within the business • What they should bring – this may be originals of certificates or examples of work • Expected length of the interview – start and finish time • Format of the interview – is it a one-to-one interview? If it is a panel interview, supply the number on the panel, their names or their position within the organisation.

Slide

Notify applicant of interview

Other issues to consider:

- There may be a need to negotiate time & date of the interview
- Advise candidates of any workplace-based material available to them to assist with the interview.

Slide 128

Slide No	Trainer Notes
128.	Trainer suggests to trainees when notifying applicants regarding interviews they should: • Be prepared to negotiate a time and date • Advise candidate about what is available to assist them at the interview – such as KSC, workplace information packs, 'Tips on Interviews' and Job Descriptions. Class Activity – Handouts Trainer obtains sample business 'information packs' and 'tips on interviews' sheets, and: • Hands them out to trainees • Discusses contents • Explains why these are provided • Seeks feedback from trainees on their benefit to the enterprise and the applicants.

Slide

Conduct job interview

Conducting a job interview:

- Requires much planning & preparation
- Usually requires involvement of several internal personnel.

129.	Trainer advises trainees conducting the interview is the most high-profile aspect of the recruitment and selection process stressing: • There is a need to undertake lots of planning and preparation in order to conduct an effective interview – no effective interview can ever take place unless appropriate planning and preparation has occurred • There is usually a need to involve several other workplace personnel in the planning and preparation – as well as the actual interview itself.

Slide

Planning & preparation can include:

- Booking room for interviews
- Determining duration of interviews
- Scheduling interviews with applicants
- Identifying who will conduct the interviews

Slide 130

Slide No	Trainer Notes
130.	Trainer advises trainees interview arrangements ('planning and preparation') may include: • Booking a room for the interviews – such as the Board room, an office or a section of an unused dining room or bar closed to the public and free of wandering staff • Determining the time to be allowed for each interview and allowing for breaks to be scheduled between each interview so interviews can be reviewed and evaluated and interviewers can discuss the candidate for the job • Scheduling the actual interviews – with short-listed applicants • Identifying who will conduct and participate in the interviews – it is common practice to ensure a gender balance on all interview panels wherever possible.

- Pre-reading & digesting all appropriate resumés
- Determine necessary protocols, roles & responsibilities in the interviews
- Arranging catering.

Slide 131

131.	Trainer continues to provide advice to trainees regarding planning and preparation for interviews: • Pre-reading and digesting all appropriate resumes – to be sure interviewers are familiar with the applicant and their background • Facilitating a meeting between all members of the interview panel or group to: ▪ Identify the specific format of the interview – see next slide ▪ Identify the questions to be asked ▪ Clarify the relevant job description, job specification and selection criteria ▪ Identify who will lead the interview, welcome the applicant, and terminate the interview ▪ Identify who will ask which questions, and in which order • Arranging catering (such as coffee, tea or iced water), where required.

Slide

Basic interview formats:

- One-on-one interviews
- Panel interview
- Group interview
- Telephone interview.

Slide 132

Slide No	Trainer Notes
132.	Trainer explains to trainees the basic job interview options are: • One-to-one interviews – common where the position is for a lower level position and where the person conducting the interview (often the owner, manager or a supervisor) believes they are best placed to determine the best applicant. This interview involves the applicant sitting face-to-face with the interviewer and responding to their questions. This style of interview is quick, requires only one person to be involved but suffers potentially from lack of objectivity. It is very common in smaller, owner-operated businesses • The panel interview – where a number of people (three to five is common) interview one applicant at a time • The group interview – where a number of applicants are interviewed simultaneously by a range of interviewers. Note: some people refer to a 'panel' interview as a 'group' interview so be sure to determine what term is used in the workplace to avoid confusion • Telephone interview – where one or more people use a tele-conference (of some format – for example, Skype or Lync) to interview applicants. Telephone interviews are difficult (and arguably of minimum use) for both interviewers and interviewees as both are commonly not familiar with either conducting them or participating in them.

Slide

Your workplace may use 'rounds of interviews':

- First round = interviews with all who were short-listed
- Second round = candidates may undertake a test or more in-depth interview
- Third round = final interview where hiring decision is made.

Slide 133

Slide No	Trainer Notes
133.	Trainer states to trainees that in much the same way applicants are short-listed for interview, an interview may be also used to determine if an applicant moves to the next 'round of interviews', explaining: • This is not especially common but the practice of 'interview rounds' does exist with it being most used for middle-to-higher level positions • The first interview (the first 'round of interviews') will involve all those who were short-listed. The interview enables interviewers to meet the applicants, ask some questions and form an opinion. Applicants are usually asked the same questions and evaluated against the same criteria. The focus of the first round questions is 'can this person do the job?' • Traditionally, a number of applicants are rejected by the interviewers after this first interview for a variety of reasons. Those remaining may be asked to undertake a designated test or task. Their performance may determine if they are asked to attend a second interview (the 'second round of interviews') • The second round of interviews focuses more on the individual applicants and questions tend to address their individual ability, history, suitability, attitude, knowledge, and expertise. The focus of this round therefore tends to be 'why should I employ you for this job?' • At the end of this second round, more applicants are commonly rejected • The third round is the final interview where 'more difficult' issues and questions are covered. It is the outcome of this 'round of interview' which determines the successful candidate for the job.

‘Special needs’ considerations may include:

- Scheduling interview at an appropriate times
- Providing documentation in large print
- Providing easy access or car parking
- Determining if there is a need for assistive technology

(Continue)

Slide 134

Slide No	Trainer Notes
134.	Trainer recommends to trainees they should accommodate ‘special needs’ applicants if the workplace wants to discharge its EO obligations suggesting possible responses to special needs can include: • Scheduling the interview at an appropriate time for the candidate – to accommodate their transport and other needs • Providing certain documentation in large print – for vision impaired applicants • Providing easy access or car parking to facilitate attendance at the interview for wheelchair applicants • Determining if there is a need for assistive technology and taking steps to provide it where necessary.

- Being sensitive to individual need
- Preparing alternative documentation to suit applicant needs
- Using an interpreter
- Permitting support persons at interview
- Including a 'special needs' staff member on the interview team.

Slide 135

Slide No	Trainer Notes
135.	Trainer continues to make recommendation to trainees about what they might do at interviews to accommodate 'special needs' applicants: • Preparing to be sensitive to individual needs at the interview – such as focussing on looking directly at a person who lip reads • Preparing and using visual materials and diagrams in cases where written material is inappropriate • Using an interpreter, as appropriate – including sign language • Allowing support persons to accompany the person being interviewed • Including a 'special needs' person as part of the interview panel.

Slide

Interview basics include:

- There must be a purpose for the interview
- Realise interviewing is difficult & does not just 'happen'
- A list of questions need to be prepared
- A checklist may be used to assist conduct of interviews
- An 'Interview Rating Sheet' may need to be created.

Slide 136

Slide No	Trainer Notes
136.	Trainer explains interview basics to trainees: • Whether the selection interview is one-on-one or a panel type it should be structured and have a focus. It must never simply be a 'get-together' for a pleasant chat where anything and everything is discussed. The time spent in conducting interviews is another of the considerable expenses associated with staff hiring • Those involved must realise interviewing is a difficult task and give it the proper attention it deserves and prepare adequately for it – no-one can never just walk into an interview situation 'cold' and expect to be effective. Effective interviews never just happen. There is a need to prepare and organise so there is a very clear idea of what is intended to be achieved with each interviewee at each interview • A list of questions needs to be prepared, and the qualities and attitudes being sought for the vacancy being interviewed for need to be clarified • Many interviewers use a checklist to guide them during interviews – a list setting out areas (for example) such as personal appearance, interests, long range goals, personal ideas as to how to improve XYZ, or how to achieve ABC, and the applicant's manner • An 'Interview rating Sheet' may need to be prepared – to use as an objective basis for recording candidate responses during the interview and making the final selection of the successful applicant.

Slide

Before interviews staff involved must ensure:

- Applicants have been notified & advised about what to bring
- Applications have been read
- Job Description & Specification have been read
- KSC have been read
- An appropriate interview location is ready
- Interviewee roles have been clarified.

Slide 137

Slide No	Trainer Notes
137.	Trainer tells trainees prior to each interview those conducting the interview must ensure they have: • Notified each applicant well in advance of where and when the interview is to be conducted – this may have to be negotiated with the applicant especially where they are already employed by someone else, so flexibility, discretion and tact is needed • Informed candidates of what they need to bring with them – such as originals of photocopied submissions, certificates, samples, photos of work or additional references • Pre-read the applicant's original submission – together with any reports generated by others involved in the selection process (regarding possible need for practical tests, further telephone or other checks, queries to be raised during the interview, or perceived anomalies with a resume requiring clarification) • Pre-read the job description and job specification for the job in question – so as to be familiar with what is required and to ensure the thinking of the interviewers is not out-of-date with reality, or out of synch with the advertised requirements of the position • Pre-read the Key Selection Criteria – to reinforce familiarity with non-negotiable requirements of the position • Arranged for a quiet, undisturbed, comfortable, non-threatening environment in which to conduct the interview

- Where a panel interview is to be used, determine who will take various roles in the interview – working out who will welcome the candidate, who will introduce the other members on the panel, who will ask which questions, who will go first, who will close the interview.

Class Activity – Guest Speaker

Trainer arranges for a suitable HR manager (or similar) to attend and:

- Discuss their views on interviewing applications for vacancies
- Present details of the planning and preparation they do prior to an interview
- Provide examples of documentation they use related to interviews
- Give opinions and tips on effective interview techniques.

Slide

Conduct job interview

At the start of the interview:

- Greet the applicant & welcome them
- Smile – shake hands
- Put applicant at ease
- Introduce self
- Introduce other interviewers.

Slide 138

Slide No	Trainer Notes
138.	Trainer describes for trainees the practices that should occur at the start of an interview. • Greet the applicant – this must be done to demonstrate it is a pleasure to see them (body language is obviously very important, and what is said at this stage may also have been planned in advance in order to send the right message). It is vital this greeting does not send the message the process is being rushed, interviewers are upset or under any sort of other pressure • Smile and offer a hand to shake hands with the candidate. Always be prepared for the candidate to offer their hand • Put the applicant at ease – timing for the interview should allow a minute or two to provide some time for the interviewee to settle down and adjust to the strange surroundings of an interview situation. The candidate needs a moment to sum things up – consider offering a beverage in this space, or even engaging in some small talk about the weather • Introduce self – and all other people who are on the interview panel. Make sure this is done clearly and without rushing. It is important the candidate hears what is said and understands who the panel are • Give people's names and their position within the business together with a quick word as to why they are part of the interview team. The names used when introductions are made should indicate the tenor and formality of the interview.

Slide

When conducting the main part of the interview:

- Show you have read the application
- State purpose of the interview
- Provide brief outline of the business?
- Check legal entitlement to work
- Ask 'open' questions

(Continue)

Slide 139

Slide No	Trainer Notes
139.	Trainer presents to trainees points to note when conducting the interview proper: • Prove familiarisation with applicant's application and background by reference to their application form or resume – it is usual to compliment them on some aspect of their achievement or their application, experience or qualifications • State what the purpose of the interview is – options may include to obtain more in-depth information to use as the basis for final selection, to flesh out areas not fully addressed in a previous interview or to gauge their interest in and commitment to a certain area. A quick review of the job description can be successfully used to achieve this. This part of the interview is also the usual time to ensure the candidate is aware of any non-negotiable aspects, or 'challenging' parts, of the job. Even where this information has been provided in job advertisements, on the application form or selection criteria it is important it is repeated here • It may also be appropriate to provide a brief background of the organisation to help 'set the scene' for the interview – this can include a very brief outline of things such as where the business is heading and the scope and nature of proposed expansion • Check the applicant is legally entitled to work – this is an important part of the process as the business does not want to waste time or money by hiring someone who is not legally entitled to work

- When asking questions to the candidate, be direct and clear but try to avoid closed questions (those which can be answered with a simple 'yes' or 'no') – ask plenty of the 'how' and 'why' type questions which get the interviewee talking
- Questions should have been designed to gain specific insight into areas of 'concern' identified as part of the short-listing process (there may be unexplained gaps in their employment history [why weren't they employed for that period?]; they may have changed jobs every four months [why have they changed jobs with such regularity?]). These questions should focus on the applicant's personality, ability, skills and suitability for the position.

Class Activity – Demonstration (Mock interview)

Trainer arranges for experienced people (from the Training Institute or an industry workplace) to:

- Attend class
- Describe a job they will be interviewing for
- Arrange the room as required – explaining why this is being done the way it is
- Show/explain any prepared questions or documentation to be used throughout the demonstration
- Conduct the interview – welcoming the 'interviewee', asking planned questions and follow-up questions, demonstrating techniques they apply when interviewing staff
- De-brief after the mock interview – explaining what they did and why they did it
- Answer questions from trainees.

Trainer may elect to video-tape the mock interview for later analysis.

Slide

- Do not influence candidate's answers
- Take notes

(Continue)

Slide 140

Slide No	Trainer Notes
140.	Trainer continues to present to trainees points to note when conducting the interview proper: • Where specific answers to questions are required do not be afraid to re-state the question if a direct answer is not forthcoming from the applicant. Be on the look out for any reluctance to respond directly to questions especially where previous work or working relationships are concerned • Remember to keep quiet. When a question has been asked let the applicant answer it and listen to what they say. Do not rush them and never finish their sentences for them. Do not interrupt. Many interviewers see interviews as an opportunity for them to talk or to show off their knowledge and this is to be avoided. The intent of the interview is to get the applicant talking, and to find out about them • Try not to unfairly influence the applicant's answers by giving off hints as to personal preferences, prejudices or bias. The intention is to identify the applicant's thoughts and attitudes, not to get them to modify their opinions to accord with beliefs of the interviewers • Take notes if this will help – some people believe it only serves to make the applicant nervous, but many feel it is the only way to accurately record answers which are uncovered and the only way to obtain a useful record of events for later reference and decision-making after the interview.

Slide

Conduct job interview

- Do not 'dominate' the interview or the applicant
- Follow the pre-prepared structure for the interview
- Ask everyone the same basic set of questions
- Encourage applicants to clarify what they do not understand
- Adhere to scheduled times.

Slide 141

Slide No	Trainer Notes
141.	Trainer continues to present to trainees points to note when conducting the interview proper: • Do not adopt a dominating position during the interview – the applicant is nervous enough without being made to feel more uncomfortable by obvious signs of evident authority. In addition: ▪ Do not stand while the applicant sits ▪ Do not have them looking into the sun so they are unable to see properly ▪ Do not ignore them while they talk – by attending to paperwork, adding up figures, or reading the newspaper • Follow the plan of the pre-determined structure of the interview – cover all the topics identified yet remain flexible enough to follow up any matters requiring extra attention • It is good practice to make sure all applicants are asked the same standard battery of questions, even though certain applicants may be asked additional ones • Encourage the applicant to clarify questions they are unclear about, and provide a time for them to ask questions of their own. Remember the interview is a two-way thing. Not only is the business interviewing them but they are also working out whether or not they want to become an employee • Adhere to scheduled times – finish the interview so the next one can begin on time. Try to avoid running over time.

Slide

Conduct job interview

When closing a job interview:

- Ask applicant if they have any questions
- Ask when they can start work, if selected
- Seek commitment to job hours being offered
- Ask about pay expectations.

Slide 142

Slide No	Trainer Notes
142.	Trainer provides trainees with advice regarding closing a job vacancy interview: • Ask applicant if they have any further questions – and doing this in a way that encourages them to ask • Ask when the applicant is available to begin work if hired – it is advisable to ask this question of all candidates to prevent the applicant getting false hopes of being hired • Seek commitment from the applicant in terms of the tenure of the job – this requires a question seeking confirmation from the candidate they are willing and able to work the term required for the position • Ask applicant about pay expectations – this may be appropriate in some interviews and not in others: in some interviews, the plan may have already included a statement regarding the pay the position attracts so a question might be asked as to whether or not this pay rate meets their expectations. In many cases pay rates are commonly offered on a take-it-or-leave-it basis. There is usually little or no room for pay negotiation but this should be addressed on a case-by-case basis, and there is an absolute need to be aware of any limitations applying to authority to make a financial commitment on behalf of the organisation. It may be that management are the only ones authorised to negotiate remuneration.

Slide

- Advise them about what will happen next
- Are there tests
- Confirm their contact details
- Thank them.

Slide 143

Slide No	Trainer Notes
143.	Trainer continues to provide trainees with advice regarding closing a job vacancy interview: • Let them know what will happen next – they should be informed as to when they will be notified about how they went, and how they will be notified. Advise them if they are required to undertake any further selection processes such as practical tests or a medical examination • Confirm their contact information – even though they have submitted a resume, people do re-locate and they do lose phones and change phone numbers. It is useful to verify at this stage to verify their current contact details. Where the candidate is currently working with another employer it can also be beneficial to clarify whether or not it is appropriate to contact them at work • Thank for their time in attending the interview – this demonstrates respect for their effort and is obviously the polite and correct thing to do. Determine beforehand whether there will be a hand-shake with applicants as they leave. Class Activity – Role Plays: Panel Interviews (Mock Interviews) Trainer prepares several scenarios suitable for trainees to enact a mock interview role play by identifying for a variety of job vacancies: • Position to be applied for • Remuneration

	• Job description and job specification • KSC • Interview rating sheet. Trainer distributes above information to selected small groups ('interview panels') of trainees and asks them to: • Study the material/information provided • Prepare questions for the interview • Determine the structure of the interview • Conduct the interview with trainer playing role of candidate. Trainer may video-tape the mock interview for later playback, discussion and analysis. Trainer to provide feedback to trainees on their performance during the mock interviews.

Apply relevant testing procedures

Some businesses require applicants to successfully pass tests before they are hired:

- There is very wide degree of variance regarding testing
 - Some never test applicants
 - Some tests all who pass interview
 - Some apply testing in a selective manner
- Commonly testing is done after the interview & only applied to 'successful' candidates.

Slide 144

Slide No	Trainer Notes
144.	Trainer explains to trainees it is standard procedure in some businesses for nominated vacancies to require successful applicants to undertake relevant testing before they are hired highlighting: • There is a great difference between businesses in relation to the tests they apply to job applicants • Some organisations apply no testing at all • Others require a standard test for every candidate who has passed the interview process regardless of who they are, the position they are applying for, their age, their background or industry experience • Some apply selective testing – only testing where they feel it is necessary or advisable, or there is some concern about a candidate and their ability or status • Testing is usually done after interview and only applied to those candidates the enterprise feels they want to employ – testing other candidates is time consuming and potentially quite expensive.

Slide

Apply relevant testing procedures

Testing is done to:

- Determine competency levels
- Prove health of the applicant
- Identify drugs or alcohol
- 'Profile' the person.

Slide 145

Slide No	Trainer Notes
145.	Trainer explains to trainees tests are conducted to: • Determine competency levels – these are the 'trade' or 'technical' tests designed to identify skill and the need for on-the-job training, up-skilling or top-up training: ▪ These tests are conducted in the business, using workplace equipment, items and ingredients. Tests are observed by workplace management who produce a written or verbal report on the skills of the individual ▪ Tests require the applicant to demonstrate one or more aspects of the job they are applying for in order, most commonly, to prove they have skills they have claimed ▪ In some organisations, applicants are paid for their time when they undertake these mandatory tests • Prove the health of the applicant: ▪ These are standard medical tests where the applicant is sent to a medical practitioner to have relevant tests conducted ▪ Medical testing may be applied to identify any pre-existing injury or health condition or to verify the applicant's fitness for work ▪ A written report is provided by the medical practitioner to management. • Identify drugs and/or alcohol: ▪ More and more businesses are screening employees to identify if they are affected by drugs or alcohol

	▪ Companies using this approach often have a 'zero tolerance' policy meaning any positive result means a potential job offer is withdrawn • Profile the person – by administering a battery of tests/questions to determine the personality profile of the person. This can be useful in matching a person to a job role their personality is best suited to, and can give an insight into the best ways to communicate with or manage the individual.

File application & interview documentation

After interviews, file application documentation :

- Create a file for each position advertised
- Create one file for each candidate interviewed – containing:
 - Name of applicant
 - Documents in file
 - Date application received
- Create or update register of applicants.

Slide 146

Slide No	Trainer Notes
146.	Trainer tells trainees after interviews have been conducted or testing has occurred, various internal processing and filing activities may occur. Always follow house policies or established workplace practice when filing application and interview documentation including: • Create a file for each vacancy that has been interviewed for – this may be a suspension file in a filing cabinet • Create a separate file for each candidate interviewed – this may be a manila folder for each applicant • Write on the cover of each manila folder information about the contents of the file – such as: ▪ Name of the applicant ▪ Name of every document contained in the file – for example: – Application form – Resume – Names of copies of certificates accompanying the application ▪ Date application received • Create or update a register of applications – this provides an overview of the names of applicants and the number of applications received. This can be used to decide whether or not the vacancy needs to be re-advertised before interviews are conducted or people selected.

Slide

File application & interview documentation

Converting 'application' files to 'interviewed' files may involve:

- Culling files of those not interviewed
- Re-using 'application' files as basis for 'post-interview' files
- Noting new file documents on file cover
- Updating files with other material as needed
- Maintaining file according to house protocols.

Slide 147

Slide No	Trainer Notes
147.	Trainer advises trainees activities involved in converting 'application' files to 'interviewed' files may involve: • Culling files of those who were not interviewed: ▪ Returning to applicants ▪ Shredding ▪ Sending letters of 'Thanks and Regret' • Retaining and converting files of all those who were interviewed – regardless of whether they received a job offer or not. This is what is meant by keeping an application 'on file' • Identifying new documents added to the file on the cover of the file – these documents may include 'Interview rating sheets' from the interview process as completed by interviewers. It is common practice in many establishments for all notes made during the actual interviews to be filed for future reference • These notes may be required to guide future deliberations, but may also be useful as reference if an unsuccessful applicant alleges impropriety or lodges an appeal with authorities • Update files as required – such as when results of tests and reference checks have been completed • Maintain the file according to house policy – that is, keeping the file for a nominated time period.

Slide

File application & interview documentation

Filing may also require you to:

- Detail all 'Thanks and Regret' letters sent
- Forward all applications that 'just missed out' to Personnel or various department heads
- Photocopy & forward documents of successful applicants to HRD
- Notify departments as necessary regarding employment of a new person.

Slide 148

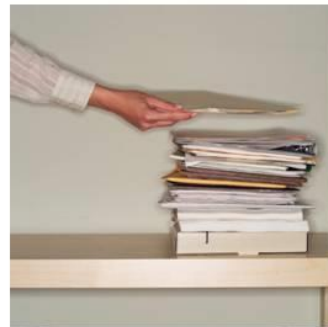

Slide No	Trainer Notes
148.	Trainer advises trainees when filing the materials identified on previous slides they may also be required to: • Detail a list of all the 'Thanks and Regret' letters that were sent – who they were sent to, when and how they were sent • Forward all applications that 'just missed out' to the Personnel department, or various department heads – so a pool of potential staff for future use can be generated • Photocopy and forward all the details and documents of the successful applicants to the Human Resources Department or the department manager – for them to use as the basis for starting up an HR file for each new employee • Notify all relevant departments as necessary regarding the employment of a new person –so they can begin their work obtaining name badges, generating identity codes, obtaining uniforms, registering for induction and orientation.

Select staff

Performance Criteria for this Element are:

- Choose successful applicants using pre-defined criteria
- Notify successful applicants & make formal job offer
- Notify unsuccessful applicants
- Follow-up as required.

Slide 154

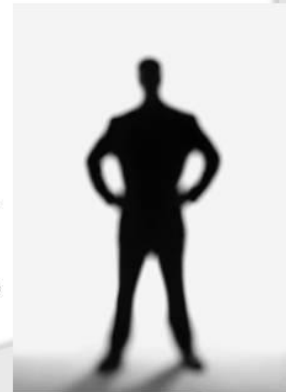

Slide No	Trainer Notes
154.	Trainer identifies for trainees the Performance Criteria for this Element, as listed on the slide. Class Activity – Discussion Trainer asks trainees questions regarding staff selection asking questions such as: • On what basis should a hiring decision be based? • How are successful applicants notified they have been successful in gaining employment? • What is a 'Letter of Thanks and Regret'? • How do workplaces formalise the offer of a job to an applicant? • What follow-up activities might be involved when a new staff member has been selected?

Slide

Choose successful applicant using pre-defined criteria

You must select the best person for the job based on KSC:

- Comparing the applicant with the job analysis, description & specification
- Reviewing the interview
- Consider impressions & opinions
- Rating the applicants into priority order
- Determining if an offer should be made.

Slide 155

Slide No	Trainer Notes
155.	Trainer advises trainees selection of staff to fill job vacancies should be based on picking the best staff for the job by comparing them to the predetermined key selection criteria for the position. This stage of the process involves: • Comparing the applicant with the internally generated job analysis, description and specification – and assessing the relevant suitability of each applicant on this basis • Reviewing the interview process and contemplating information obtained from the applicant, as well as opinions and impressions gained by the interviewers – this allows for ‘new information’ discovered at the interview to be taken into account • Rating the applicants into priority order - who is the best candidate? Second-best? Remember the first choice may reject the job offer, may have got another job, or may be waiting for a better offer so it is always useful to pick the ‘top three’ • Determining if an offer should be made to a candidate – or if whether there should be more interviews or re-advertising for the position.

Slide

Choose successful applicant using pre-defined criteria

An 'Interview Rating Sheet':

- Rates each applicant
- Scores out of a maximum number (10)
- Completed by each interviewer for each applicant
- Forms part of the file for each candidate
- Helps interviewers compare like with like
- May be used to assist with short-listing applicants.

Slide 156

Slide No	Trainer Notes
156.	Trainer advises trainees it is useful to use an Interview rating Sheet to rate every applicant against the selection criteria: All scores given to an applicant for each criterion are totalled – the one with the biggest score gets the job • Every member of the interview panel should complete their own Interview rating Sheet – and scores are totalled for all interviewers at the end of the interview • This rating scheme is usually a one page form attached to the file of the applicant. The file will contain the applicant's resume plus any application form, covering letter and copies of any qualifications and references submitted. It may also contain notes made by those who have conducted reference checks • This rating form could also be used during the actual interview process to help record information obtained from the applicant during the interview. They are useful as they help compare 'like with like' by 'forcing' comparison of different people using the same reference points • This approach can also be used to determine which applicants are short-listed. Class Activity – Handouts Trainer copies two sample Interview Rating Sheet provided in Trainee Manual: • Blank 'Grand Hotel Interview Rating Sheet' • Completed 'Grand Hotel Interview Rating Sheet' for the position of Gaming Room Attendant, completed by Sally Kilpatrick.

	Trainer: • Distributes blank copy and: ▪ Explains how the sheet is used by interviewers to score candidates ▪ Explains all the sections of the sheet ▪ Discusses need for interviewers to determine criteria to be used ▪ Identifies how KSC can be integrated into this form • Distributes completed copy and: ▪ Describes how it has been completed ▪ Asks trainees to identify who should be offered the job on the basis of the Interview Rating Sheet (Answer: Nicole North) ▪ Asks trainees who is second-best choice (Answer: Will Williams) ▪ Asks trainees who is least preferable choice (Answer: Carla Young).

After the interview:

- Use Interview Rating Sheet as a guide only
- Refer to interview notes
- Complete the notes before discussing the candidate
- Use Rating Sheets & notes as basis for deciding successful candidate
- File Interview Rating Sheets & notes.

Slide 157

Slide No	Trainer Notes
157.	Trainer explains to trainees other considerations that may need to be factored in after an interview before selecting the best candidate for the job. Scores on the Interview Rating Sheet may be a guide as to who should get the job as other factors may also impact: • Where notes have been made during the interview, these should be reviewed – usually extra comment will be added on the basis of feelings, reflections and observations regarding the applicant and these can be the cause of concern, or help to verify the most highly-rated candidate really is the best choice • Where panel interviews are being conducted it is best for panel members to complete and review their individual notes before they engage in discussion because the discussion may influence the notes they make • The notes made should be included, along with the rating sheet, in the interview file that has been created for each candidate. These documents can provide a useful basis for reference in the future and also assist in selecting an alternate employee where the first person chosen for the job refuses the job offer made to them. Class Activity – Individual Exercise Trainer identifies one work position for each trainee and asks them to: • Prepare a job description and job specification for the position • Develop KSC for the position • Create an Interview Rating Sheet for the position.

Slide

Choose successful applicant using pre-defined criteria

Hiring decisions are sometimes made on the basis of 'other' considerations:

- Does the interview panel think the person will fit in with existing staff?
- “Could I work with this person?”
- “How will the other staff get on with them?”

Slide 158

Slide No	Trainer Notes
158.	Trainer explains to trainees the selection of many staff is done on other factors including: • Will the best candidate 'fit in' with the existing staff and with the organisation overall. While this consideration is not, on the surface, a very detached or professional one it can be critical in terms of maintaining the unity and cohesion of existing teams and in preserving the 'happy and harmonious workplace' that already exist. It may be counter-productive to hire someone who appears to be an excellent choice for the job but who upsets and annoys all the other staff, potentially creating management problems, causing other staff to leave and lowering both productivity and staff morale • This means many interviews are conducted within an environment where interviewers are consistently asking themselves questions such as: ▪ “Could I work with this person?” ▪ “How will other staff get on with this person?”

Slide

Notify successful applicants & make formal job offer

When the successful candidate has been selected they must be advised of this:

- A telephone call is the usual method
- A formal 'Letter of Offer' should also be provided
- All enterprise policies & procedures must be complied with.

Slide 159

Slide No	Trainer Notes
159.	Trainer informs trainees when all applicants have been interviewed, or otherwise assessed, it is usual to make an employment offer to the successful applicant(s): • A telephone call is the usual way to do this – but other options may be approved by workplace management • The offer should be accompanied by a formal 'Letter of Appointment' – see next slides • Any offers must accommodate the requirements of enterprise policies and comply with any applicable legal requirements • Whilst it is common practice to notify all unsuccessful applicants as soon as possible after a hiring decision has been made, it is also common to keep the 'next best' two or three applicants in reserve in case the first choice does not take up the job offer.

Slide

Notify successful applicants & make formal job offer

Letter of Offer:

- Also known as 'Letter of Appointment'
- Are not used by all employers
- May be a draft work contract
- Meet all workplace & legal requirements.

Slide 160

Slide No	Trainer Notes
160.	Trainer explains the use of a 'Letter of Offer' (also known as a 'Letter of Appointment'): • In addition to a verbal offer of employment, employers should provide the successful candidate with a written offer – but not all employers do so unless there is a legal obligation to do so • In some cases, this may be a draft work contract, but a Letter of Offer, or Letter of Appointment is also a popular option • A draft work contract will align with existing workplace contracts, tailor-made for the individual position and is commonly prepared by the HR office.

Slide

The Letter of Appointment should include information such as:

- Start date & time
- Start location
- Name of award they are being employed under
- Job classification & employment status

Slide 161

Slide No	Trainer Notes
161.	Trainer informs trainees a Letter of Appointment should include information such as: • When the successful candidate is expected to commence their employment – a day, date and time • The physical location where work is to comment – naming the business, giving a street address and the name of a department where the person will work or attend for initial induction • Identification of any award or agreement the person is to be engaged under – so they understand their conditions of employment • The job classification and employment status attaching to the position the person is being offered – for example 'Beverage waiter – full-time', or 'Receptionist – part-time'.

Slide

162.	Trainer continues to advise trainees regarding contents of a Letter of Application: • Details of any applicable probationary period – three months is a common term • Entitlements relating to annual leave and sick leave • Specified hours of work identifying start and finish times, hours per week or fortnight or shift work. A statement is often included indicating 'reasonable overtime' is to be worked • Remuneration details specifying: ▪ Pay per week or hour ▪ Day on which wages are paid ▪ Method of payment for wages detailing if payment is made in cash, by cheque or via direct deposit into bank account • Advice regarding legislated obligations – such as superannuation, taxation and other issues.

Slide

- Short-form job description
- Brief description of main duties
- Date offer is valid to
- Action needed to accept the offer.

Slide 163

Slide No	Trainer Notes
163.	Trainer continues to advise trainees regarding contents of a Letter of Application: • A short-form job description – providing the basic duties required by the position. This should reflect what was discussed at the interview. • A brief description of the main duties involved • A date indicating when the offer is valid to – and therefore when it expires, and when the offer will lapse • Action the applicant needs to take in order to accept the offer. Class Activity – Handout Trainer obtains sample Letter of Appointment or draft work contract and: • Distributes to trainees • Discusses the contents of the document • Explains why each statement is provided.

Slide

When making offers of employment, remember:

- Only authorised personnel can make job offers
- Management should read & approve Letters of Appointment before they are distributed
- A copy of the Letter of Appointment should be included in applicant file

(Continue)

Slide 164

Slide No	Trainer Notes
164.	Trainer adds other important points for trainees to note when notifying successful applicants: • Only authorised personnel can make job offers – official approval from management may be required before making an offer • Management should read and approve Letters of Appointment before they are distributed – to ensure they are correct and to make sure they agree with what is contained in them • A copy of the Letter of Appointment should be included in the relevant file for the applicant – with dates identifying when the Letter was given and when the offer expires.

Slide

Notify successful applicants & make formal job offer

- Keep reasons for selection confidential
- Verify if Letter of Offer or draft work contract to be taken off the premises
- Make contact with everyone who has been sent an offer.

Slide 165

Slide No	Trainer Notes
165.	Trainer continues advising trainees about additional points to note when notifying successful applicants: • Details of the selection process must be kept private – only those actually involved in the selection process should know how the choice of the successful applicant occurred • Some organisations will allow the Letter of Appointment to be taken away from the workplace • If the Letter of Offer is emailed or posted to the applicant it is a good idea to contact them to ensure they have received it – this is also an opportunity to respond to any queries the candidate may have. Class Activity – Guest Speaker Trainer arranges for local industrial relations official to attend and: • Talk to trainees about: • Requirements to be observed when offering employment to a person • Issues that cannot be included in an offer • Probationary periods • Their experience with good and bad offers, and those that have been illegal • Distribute to trainees: ▪ Copies of relevant legislation, fact sheets, information ▪ Sample Letters of Offer or work contracts ▪ Contact details for later follow-up by trainees if required.

Slide

Notify unsuccessful applicants

Most common method of advising unsuccessful candidates is by sending a Letter of Thanks & Regret:

- On letterhead
- Containing:
 - Date
 - Thanks
 - Name of position applied for
 - Statement they have been unsuccessful
 - Encouragement statements.

Slide 166

Slide No	Trainer Notes
166.	Trainer tells trainees it is standard 'best practice' business practice is to notify applicants who have been unsuccessful in gaining employment. The most common method of notifying applicants they have not been successful in obtaining employment is to send them a Letter of Thanks and Regret which is a standard 'template' letter on company letterhead paper which usually contains the following: • Date • Thanks for the application • Identification of the position applied for – because some people can apply for multiple positions • A statement advising in this instance their application has been unsuccessful • Further statements such as: ▪ Encouragement in their job seeking activities ▪ Encouragement to apply for other positions at the organization as they are advertised.

Slide

Notify unsuccessful applicants

De-briefing interviews may be offered to unsuccessful applicants – where they are offered they may be:

- Offered to all unsuccessful applicants
- Offered only to internal company staff
- Offered only to selected applicants.

Slide 167

Slide No	Trainer Notes
167.	Trainer advises trainees Letters of Thanks and Regret may, if the enterprise offers them, make mention of de-briefing interviews for unsuccessful candidates. Where they are offered they may be: • Offered to all unsuccessful applicants – this is unlikely but certainly a good PR exercise and potentially beneficial where sufficient skilled staff are available as the interview can direct applicants regarding the skills and experience they need to gain before making another application • Offered only to internal company staff who have applied for a promotion • Offered only to selected applicants based on their potential to be useful to the company in the future.

Slide

Notify unsuccessful applicants

The de-briefing interview will:

- Be conducted by an interviewer
- Provide feedback on personal presentation & conduct
- Provide advice & tips for future applications
- Identify issues not covered well by the applicant at the interview
- Provide encouragement
- Advise of 'next steps'.

Slide 168

Slide No	Trainer Notes
168.	Trainer advises trainees the de-briefing interview will: • Be conducted by one of the people on the interview panel – so there is first-hand feedback on the applicant's performance at the interview • Provide feedback on how the applicant presented – and conducted themselves at the interview • Provide advice – regarding their CV and their physical response to the job vacancy advertisement or directions • Provide tips and advice – on how their next interview may be more positive • Identify issues or questions not covered well by the applicant • Encourage the person to continue applying for work • Give advice on what they need to do to address identified gaps in their skills, knowledge or experience.

Slide

Notify unsuccessful applicants

Unacceptable notification to unsuccessful applicants:

- Anything prohibited by company policy
- Email is acceptable in some businesses but not others
- Telephone is normally not used
- Texting/SMS is unacceptable.

Slide 169

Slide No	Trainer Notes
169.	Trainer identifies unacceptable ways of enterprises notifying unsuccessful candidates. All company policies regarding notifying unsuccessful applicants as they apply to their workplace must be adhered to advising the following may apply: • Email notification is approved in some businesses • Telephone notification is usually not used – as this can involve discussion with the applicant about why they were unsuccessful • The use of texting/SMS is generally unacceptable.

Slide

Follow-up as required

After an offer has been made to an applicant you may need to follow-up to:

- Obtain originals of documents
- Explain details of the offer

(Continue)

Slide 170

Slide No	Trainer Notes
170.	Trainer informs trainees when a Letter of Appointment (or similar) has been sent to a successful applicant there can be need to follow-up in order to: • Obtain original copies of documents presented at interviews – so they can be photocopied and included in the Personnel file for the person. Documents may include: ▪ Birth certificate ▪ Work permit/visa ▪ Qualifications, credentials and licences • Explain details of the job offer, contract or other 'work instrument'. It is to be expected every successful job applicant will have questions of some sort about at least one or two aspects of their new employment. This applies even to successful applicants who have previously worked at the business but are transferring to a new job or position.

Slide

Follow-up as required

- Confirm offer has been received:
 - In accordance with protocols applying in the individual workplace:

 - Negotiation of terms
 - Witnessing of signature

(Continue)

Slide 171

Slide No	Trainer Notes
171.	Trainer continues to advise trainees about possible follow-up activities once a Letter of Offer has been sent to a successful applicant: • Confirm acceptance of the job offer – this may: ▪ Be an unconditional acceptance of what has been offered in the formal offer of employment ▪ Require negotiation of terms, conditions or pay rates. It is important only those with the necessary authority are involved in these negotiations ▪ Be a simple verbal acceptance ▪ Require the formal signing of the Letter of Appointment or other employment instrument ▪ Require the signature to be 'witnessed' by a designated person within the employing workplace ▪ Require the signed document to be photocopied and: – Forwarded to Personnel/HR – so they can initiate payment and other internal requirements applying to the engagement of new staff – Added to the existing Personnel file for the individual.

Slide

Follow-up as required

- Offer a rejected offer to another applicant:
 - Seeking direction from interview panel
 - Obtaining necessary permission
 - Updating files.

Slide 172

Slide No	Trainer Notes
172.	Trainer completes advising trainees about possible follow-up activities once a Letter of Offer has been sent to a successful applicant: • Offer the job to another applicant – if the first choice of the selection panel refuses the job offer which may entail: ▪ Contacting the interview person for their advice about who to offer the job to ▪ Reviewing the interview rating sheets to identify the 'next best' applicant ▪ Obtaining permission to make the offer to a nominated person ▪ Producing or organising for an alternate Letter of Appointment, contract or employment instrument to be drafted – changes may need to be made to an existing document in terms of: – Dates – starting date, date for accepting the offer – Name – Remuneration – the alternate candidate may be offered a higher or lower rate than first identified.

Summary – Element 4

When selecting staff:

- Aim to choose the best person for each vacancy based on objective information
- Observe legal requirements relating to EO in employment
- Take notes at the interview & compare interviewers thoughts

Slide

Summary – Element 4

- Retain the names & details of suitable applicants until the preferred choice has accepted the job offer
- Notify unsuccessful applicants and process notifications
- Issue a Letter of Appointment to formalise all job offers
- Follow-up after job offers have been made and accepted.

Implement induction & orientation session or program

Performance Criteria for this Element are:

- Plan the induction & orientation session
- Conduct the induction & orientation session
- Review the induction & orientation session.

Slide 175

Slide No	Trainer Notes
175.	Trainer continues to identify for trainees the Performance Criteria for this Element, as listed on the slide. Class Activity – General Discussion Trainer leads a general class discussion on reviewing induction and orientation by asking questions such as: • What is an induction and orientation session? Why are they conducted and what do they cover? • What experience do you have in relation to being inducted into a new workplace? What was involved? How long did it take? Who did it? • Why is there a need to review induction and orientation sessions? • Who might be involved in such a review? • How often should these reviews take place? • What topics should be addressed as part of these reviews.

Slide

Plan the induction & orientation session

All new employees should undertake an 'Induction & Orientation session':

- All inductions must be planned
- Many items need to be covered
- A positive experience for staff on their first day
- Use existing or new induction & orientation material.

Slide 176

Slide No	Trainer Notes
176.	Trainer explains to trainees it is standard business practice for all new employees to be given some form of induction program (also known as 'induction and orientation' programs or sessions). Trainer emphasis basic requirements for inductions: • They must be planned – it is vital to know what needs to be presented, who will be involved and when things will happen • Many things need to be planned – see following slides for examples • The induction and orientation must give a positive impression to new staff on their first day with their new employer • In organisations where induction and orientations are well-prepared and conducted on a regular basis, much of what is required will already be available and all that is required is to use what already exists • Where little exists in the way of formal induction and orientation sessions much more will need to be organised and prepared.

Slide

Plan the induction & orientation session

Timing requirements for inductions & orientations:

- Time allowed varies widely 10 minutes – 2 weeks
- Planning is essential for effectiveness
- Longer induction & orientation sessions require more planning.

Slide 177

Slide No	Trainer Notes
177.	Trainer talks to trainees about timing requirements for induction and orientation sessions stating: • The amount of time allocated to Induction and Orientation sessions/programs varies enormously from 10 – 15 minutes through to a day or more (or even two weeks) in some larger premises • The more planning and preparation that goes into these programs, the more effective they will be • Certainly no effective induction program simply 'happens' of its own accord • The longer the period for the induction and orientation, the more there will be included in the program session so the more need there is for planning.

Slide

Plan the induction & orientation session

There should be a familiar face at the start of every induction & orientation session:

- Try to include someone who was on the interview panel
- Greet the new employee on arrival
- Make a positive comment about their expected association with the business.

Slide 178

Slide No	Trainer Notes
178.	Trainer informs trainees there should be a familiar face at the start of all induction and orientation sessions: • Whilst practicalities vary between establishments, it is a positive start to a new employee's association with their new employer if someone present at the interview is there to welcome them on their first day • This provides a familiar face to greet the new employee and demonstrate a personal interest in their welfare and in their association with the business.

Slide

Plan the induction & orientation session

OHS considerations must be covered in every induction & orientation:

- Need for of a safe workplace
- To present workplace OHS policies & procedures
- To present safe work practices
- To identify OHS support infrastructure
- To explain OHS internal workplace structures.

Slide 179

Slide No	Trainer Notes
179.	Trainer explains to trainees an important element of every induction and orientation program is the provision of OHS information to new staff: • This is done to allow operators to discharge their legal obligations in relation to informing staff about potentially dangerous situations and procedures and relevant OHS requirements to be followed • Basic OHS requirements covered as part of the Induction can include: ▪ Provision of OHS policies and procedures ▪ Presentation and description of safe work practices ▪ Identification of location of first aid kits, accident registers, fire extinguishers and evacuation plans ▪ Explanation of OHS structures (committees and representatives) within the business.

Slide

Plan the induction & orientation session

Inductions & orientations also need to include:

- A semi-socialising experience
- Establishment-wide policies & procedures
- Who is the best person to contact
- Specific other topics.

Slide 180

Slide No	Trainer Notes
180.	Trainer explains in addition to what has already been identified an induction and orientation session needs to include: • A semi-socialising experience – getting to know other staff, putting a name to a face and learning their roles • Establishment-wide policies and procedures – such as where to park, general staff-related staff policies, standard operating procedures for generic tasks • Names of best person to contact for work-related queries and their contact details • Specific other topic – see following slides.

Slide

Plan the induction & orientation session

Formal induction & orientation sessions must address:

- Completion of necessary paperwork
- 'Need to know' information
- Tour of the workplace

(continue)

Slide 181

Slide No	Trainer Notes
181.	Trainer instructs trainees about the contents of a formal induction and orientation session; • Completion of necessary paperwork – covering internal and legislative requirements, such as: ▪ Offer of employment letter (if not already signed and completed) ▪ Staff uniform form ▪ Personal details form including identification of 'next of kin' ▪ Bank account details form – for payment of wages into the bank ▪ Personal taxation form ▪ Superannuation application form • 'Need to know' information – names of key staff, location of toilets and change room, where staff can park their cars, how to sign in at the beginning of work, where company policies and procedures are located. This may require: ▪ Arrangement of access to workplace intranet ▪ Distribution of copies of policies and procedures ▪ Handing out staff employee manual • Tour of the workplace – to show the extent of the business, the physical relationship of one area to another, and to allow the new staff member to become more aware about the total nature of the business. Some businesses include a 'Tour Checklist' the new staff member ticks off as they visit certain areas of the property, to ensure they get to see all the necessary areas.

Class Activity – Handouts

Trainer obtains sample documentation as identified on this slide and:

- Distributes to trainees
- Discusses and explains their role
- Tells trainees where these forms may be obtained.

Slide

Slide 182

Slide No	Trainer Notes
182.	Trainer continues to provide examples of what needs to be covered in an induction and orientation session: • Meeting with managers, supervisors and co-workers – to introduce the new member and enable them to put a face to the name • Allocation of uniform and relevant badges – issuing of the name badge and uniforms. This may include fittings or ordering of new uniform. A copy of the 'staff uniform policy' may also accompany this, together with a sheet explaining the charges for replacement uniform items • Detailed department and position induction – explaining how the new staff member's role fits in with other roles in the business and how the department collaborates with other departments to achieve overall organisation aims, identification of where materials, utensils and other work requisites are located • Expectations of the role – setting out what is expected from the employee by management, customers and other staff • Coverage of details in the relevant job description – explaining and clarifying aspects of the job as it applies to the individual. This is a detailed, point-by-point coverage and explanation of the job further explaining the job that has already been briefly addressed during the interview process. This explanation is intended to highlight vital aspects of the job and every aspect considered important.

Slide

- Copy of roster
- Enterprise-based terminology, acronyms & abbreviations
- Explanation of the operation of the business

(continue)

Slide 183

Slide No	Trainer Notes
183.	Trainer continues to provide examples of what needs to be covered in an induction and orientation session: • Distribution of a copy of roster – so the new staff member knows when they are expected to attend for work, when their breaks are, which days are Rostered Days Off • Distribution of a list containing establishment-based terminology – this can be a physical checklist to explain establishment-specific terms and in-house shorthand or accepted abbreviations. For example, most businesses have specific operations abbreviations and terms • A written explanation of the operation of the business – this may cover an explanation of the range of products and services offered, any future plans for expansion, an overview of the different markets serviced, presentation of customer profiles, a list of the hours of operation of different departments and services, how payment is accepted throughout the venue, and even our terms of trade. There is really no end to what can be covered here, and this list is very much something that grows and changes with the business.

Slide

Plan the induction & orientation session

- Safety & security issues
- Company benefits
- Workplace awards
- Performance appraisals
- Allocation of a 'buddy'.

Slide 184

Slide No	Trainer Notes
184.	Trainer continues to provide examples of what needs to be covered in an induction and orientation session: • Explanation of safety and security issues – notification of the emphasis the venue places on the safety and security of staff and customers, explanation of where first aid kits, fire extinguishers, fire blankets, alarms and evacuation plans are located. This may also be accompanied by company policies on evacuations, robberies and other security and emergency situations • Explanation of company benefits – an explanation of staff discounts available, opportunities for promotion within the company, training provided by the company and how to take advantage of it, together with the limits that apply in each instance • Explanation of any workplace awards that may exist – such as 'Employee of the Month', how to win it and what it consists of • Information about performance appraisals– explanation and definition of what these involve, when they will take place, how they are administered and what they are used for. Important in this regard is presentation and explanation of any KPIs the employee will be evaluated against. These could include revenue generated, number of rooms serviced, number of people served, number of meals served or other indicators appropriate to the individual job role • When new staff members start their work, it is common to allocate them a person to be their workplace mentor who they can turn to for advice, information, guidance and further information.

Slide

Plan the induction & orientation session

Also a need to address the 'culture' of the workplace:

- This is 'the way we do things around here'
- Could include:
 - Mission & Vision Statements
 - Value Statement
 - Work ethic
 - The 'grapevine'
 - Workplace social opportunities.

Slide 185

Slide No	Trainer Notes
185.	Trainer identifies the induction and orientation should also address the 'culture' of the workplace: • The culture of the organisation is generally described as representing 'the way we do things around here'. It is important information for a new employee to help them 'fit in' with the workers who are already in the organisation. • This information may involve: ▪ Consideration and discussion of the Mission Statement of the business ▪ Explanation of the Vision Statement ▪ Explanation of company Values ▪ Description of the work ethic of the business ▪ Explanation of the 'grapevine' within the venue ▪ Identification of social opportunities (such as clubs) within the staff network. Class Activity – Handouts Trainer obtains sample documentation as identified on this slide and: • Distributes to trainees • Discusses and explains their role • Tells trainees how these may be developed.

Slide

Plan the induction & orientation session

Further considerations:

- Liaise with other staff & supervisors
- Plan the timing for the session:
 - Hour of day
 - Day of week

(continue)

Slide 186

Slide No	Trainer Notes
186.	Trainer presents further considerations when planning an induction and orientation: • When planning an induction for a staff member it is important to liaise with operational colleagues to ensure the induction is implemented in a manner minimising operational disruption • Two common considerations relating to the timing of the induction for a new staff member are: ▪ The hour of the day the induction is to take place ▪ The particular day of the week the induction will take place. This obviously has implications for determining the 'first day' for the new employee: it is not a good idea to conduct an induction at a busy time on a traditionally busy day. Class Activity – Guest Speaker Trainer arranges for a relevant industry manager to visit trainees to: • Discuss their role and responsibilities and how they came to be where they are • Explain the preparation they do for an induction and orientation session • Present generic material used as part of an induction and orientation session • Explain how they tailor-make induction and orientation sessions to cater for different job positions • Identify how long an induction and orientation session takes and when they conduct them • Identify the activities comprising a induction and orientation session.

Slide

Plan the induction & orientation session

- Ensure smooth flow of information during the session
- Factor in time for employee questions
- Allocate plenty of time to cover the essentials
- Ensure key staff are available.

Slide 187

Slide No	Trainer Notes
187.	Trainer continues to present further considerations when planning an induction and orientation: • The smooth flow of information – it is important to think through the proposed induction session so as to check the flow of information to the new staff member. Is there a readily understandable and sequential flow of information or is the information being presented in a random, confusing and disjointed fashion? • Allowing time for the new staff member to ask questions and clarify information – it must be remembered the induction and orientation program should be viewed as an opportunity for the new staff member to ask questions in order to clarify their issues and to find out further information they deem necessary. An effective induction program will feature plenty of encouragement to the new person to ask questions, and plenty of time for their questions to be addressed • Allocating adequate time for covering the essentials – a common problem with induction programs is they are often too rushed. This can be a problem because a new staff member is not likely to complain or question being hurried through their first day at work. They will usually just keep quiet and learn nothing, hoping to pick things up as they go. Where this happens the induction really has been a waste of time and can even be regarded as counter-productive

- Ensuring the availability of key staff – this is a difficult thing to organise and very often will require the new staff member take several days to meet all the people seen as 'key' for their role. Given all staff have time off, other duties to perform, may be sick or on annual leave, it is not surprising few new staff get to meet all 'key' people on their first day. The important point to bear in mind is there is a need to identify who these key staff are, and then ensure they are introduced to the new person as soon as possible. This will often involve following-up people many days after the initial induction to introduce them to others.

Class Activity – Small Group Exercise

Trainer divides trainees into small groups and allocates one job position to each group and asks them to develop an induction.

Slide

Conduct the induction & orientation session

When conducting an induction & orientation session:

- You only have once chance to make a positive impression
- Arrive early – never keep new staff waiting
- Welcome them
- Express appropriate sentiments

(continue)

Slide 188

Slide No	Trainer Notes
188.	Trainer advises trainees their role may to conduct induction and orientation for new staff explaining important things to consider when personally conducting induction and orientation sessions are: • There is only one opportunity to make a positive impression in the mind of the new staff member • Arrive early for the session and ensure all the necessary preparations have been made. One of the biggest mistakes is to arrive late for the session and keep the new staff member waiting beyond the advised starting time for the session. This immediately sends a poor message to them about how they are valued and starts their relationship with the company on a negative footing • Welcome the new staff member when they arrive for their induction and: ▪ Introduce self – where necessary ▪ Try to make them feel at ease ▪ Congratulate them on securing the job • Express appropriate sentiments: ▪ “I look forward to working with you” ▪ “I hope you have a long and fruitful relationship with the business” ▪ “I think you will have a rewarding, challenging and interesting time with us”.

Slide

Conduct the induction & orientation session

- Explain what orientation will cover
- Tell them how long it will take
- Encourage questions
- Stick to the plan for the session
- Be flexible
- Focus on the new employee

(continue)

Slide 189

Slide No	Trainer Notes
189.	Trainer continues to provide advice to trainees regarding conduct of induction and orientation sessions: • Explain what the induction and orientation will cover • Identify how long the session will take • Encourage them to ask as many questions as they want • Follow the plan – it is important to adhere to the plan developed for the induction and orientation session. Departing from this plan raises the risk important information will be forgotten, and can also mean the new employee is provided with too much information and feels overwhelmed • Given the need to follow the plan for the session, the person conducting the induction must be flexible. If the plan is to enter a certain area and show the new person around, identify pieces of equipment and locate certain stock items, but there are an uncharacteristically large number of customers in the area and the staff are under obvious pressure, then the tour must be re-scheduled (even to a different day) • Concentrate on the new employee – the focus of the session must be the new staff member. Do not allow other things (telephone calls, other tasks, questions from other staff) to intrude and de-value the session.

Slide

Conduct the induction & orientation session

- Do not rush
- Do not drown the employee with information
- Provide personal insight
- Try to ensure privacy

(continue)

Slide 190

Slide No	Trainer Notes
190.	Trainer continues to provide advice to trainees regarding conduct of induction and orientation sessions: • Do not rush – try to avoid giving the impression: ▪ There are more important things to do ▪ The induction session is a chore • Try not to drown the employee with information. It is easy for new staff to be overwhelmed by a mass of information. Stick to the plan • Give personal insight – in addition to ‘structured’ information. Give the new staff member the benefit of personal experience and knowledge. Make sure nothing is said of a negative nature about the business, its practices, staff or management • Try to ensure privacy – when policies and practices have to be explained, when job requirements and expectations and similar are explained. Try to conduct these discussions in a location where there are no other staff or customers. This encourages the new person to ask questions and respects their right to privacy.

Slide

Conduct the induction & orientation session

- Answer all questions asked by new employee
- Read through important documents with them
- Avoid 'group' inductions
- Facilitate integration of new employee with existing structures & workforce
- Seek feedback on the induction & orientation.

Slide 191

Slide No	Trainer Notes
191.	Trainer continues to provide advice to trainees regarding conduct of induction and orientation sessions: • Answer all questions asked – honestly and comprehensively. Be prepared to find out answers where they are not known • Read through relevant documents with the new staff member – to ensure they understand what is required. Important points should be emphasised • Try to avoid group inductions and orientations – group sessions may appear attractive in that they can save time but the reality is often certain members of the group are overlooked or do not receive proper attention or receive the necessary information. Many group inductions are a waste of time and effort, serving no more useful purpose than 'ticking the box' that an induction has been provided • Do whatever is appropriate to facilitate integration of the new employee into existing structures and the existing workforce – show them the operation of the department/staff; explain and show what they are expected to do. Personalise the experience • Ask for feedback on the contents of the induction and orientation program and on your performance in conducting it.

Class Activity – Excursion

Trainer arranges for trainees to visit a local enterprise and:

- Talk to management about staff recruitment, selection and induction and orientation sessions
- View management offices where they work and see the facilities they have to work with
- View relevant management policies and procedures related to staffing functions
- Observe a hiring interview – if possible (or a mock interview)
- Participate in a mock induction and orientation session.

Review the induction & orientation session

Reviews of induction & orientations:

- Should take place regularly or when a need to do so arises
- Must result in necessary action being taken

192.	Trainer suggests to trainees in the same way other activities of the business should be subject to regular review, so too should the provision of induction and orientation sessions highlighting: • Inductions and orientations should be reviewed: ▪ At least annually, or ▪ Following a valid complaint from a new employee about their induction and orientation, or ▪ Following the first induction and orientation session for a newly created position • The key to reviewing induction and orientation sessions is to ensure appropriate action must be taken to address all legitimate concerns. There is no point conducting a review and then failing to act on the identified issues.

Review the induction & orientation session

- Should solicit input from all those involved in the conduct of the sessions
- Should consider planning & preparation
- Should consider time allocated
- Should consider timing of session

193.	Trainer continues to provide trainees with advice regarding reviewing induction & orientation sessions: • They should involve all those involved in the session which in practice this means the review should solicit input from: ▪ Management ▪ Co-workers ▪ Supervisors ▪ Past inductees ▪ Anyone who conducts the induction and orientation • Consider planning and preparation undertake – was there sufficient time and effort put into this phase of the induction? Often, a poor induction can be traced back to poor planning and preparation • Consider time allocated – was there sufficient time allocated to actually conducting the induction? Or was it too rushed? • Consider timing of the induction – was it conducted on the best day? At the most appropriate time, or at a time when things were too busy and key staff were unavailable because of this?

Slide

Review the induction & orientation session

- Should consider sequence of induction activities
- Should consider content of the induction

(continue)

Slide 194

Slide No	Trainer Notes
194.	Trainer continues to provide trainees with advice regarding reviewing induction & orientation sessions: • Consider sequence of the induction activities – the correct items may have been addressed by the session but were items presented in the most effective order? Is there a need to re-arrange some items to enhance learning and make the session more productive? • Consider content of the induction session – were all the necessary things covered? Were there gaps in the content provided needing attention so the new staff member is better informed or made aware of necessary (and perhaps, legislated) workplace requirements. Content is a very large area for consideration as part of the review and should examine: ▪ Contents of documents provided ▪ Contents of presentations given by key personnel to new staff ▪ Items/issues covered by the actual orientation and induction process. – Basic questions are: – Were things missing? – Was printed material legible? – Have things changed in the workplace necessitating amendments to previous induction sessions? – Can unnecessary things be removed from the induction? – Should there be a different emphasis to existing content? For example, perhaps more time should be allocated to X and less time to Y.

Review the induction & orientation session

- Should consider items distributed as part of the session
- Should consider the people conducting the session
- Should consider new employees feedback.

Slide 195

Slide No	Trainer Notes
195.	Trainer continues to provide trainees with advice regarding reviewing induction & orientation sessions: • Consider items handed out as part of the induction – were all the necessary items distributed? Were they current? Did they contain errors or were they incomplete? • Consider person conducting the orientation – looking at whether or not the individual conducting these sessions is the right person for the job. Many people believe conducting an induction session is beneath them and they begrudge doing them. This obviously does not make for effective or positive sessions • Consider feedback from participants – anything a past inductee mentions as an issue for them should be considered. Where there are multiple mentions of the same issue, certainly attention must be paid to this area.
