Introduction to trainee manual

To the Trainee

Congratulations on joining this course. This Trainee Manual is one part of a 'toolbox' which is a resource provided to trainees, trainers and assessors to help you become competent in various areas of your work.

The 'toolbox' consists of three elements:

- A Trainee Manual for you to read and study at home or in class
- A Trainer Guide with Power Point slides to help your Trainer explain the content of the training material and provide class activities to help with practice
- An Assessment Manual which provides your Assessor with oral and written questions and other assessment tasks to establish whether or not you have achieved competency.

The first thing you may notice is that this training program and the information you find in the Trainee Manual seems different to the textbooks you have used previously. This is because the method of instruction and examination is different. The method used is called Competency based training (CBT) and Competency based assessment (CBA). CBT and CBA is the training and assessment system chosen by ASEAN (Association of South-East Asian Nations) to train people to work in the tourism and hospitality industry throughout all the ASEAN member states.

What is the CBT and CBA system and why has it been adopted by ASEAN?

CBT is a way of training that concentrates on what a worker can do or is required to do at work. The aim of the training is to enable trainees to perform tasks and duties at a standard expected by employers. CBT seeks to develop the skills, knowledge and attitudes (or recognise the ones the trainee already possesses) to achieve the required competency standard. ASEAN has adopted the CBT/CBA training system as it is able to produce the type of worker that industry is looking for and this therefore increases trainees' chances of obtaining employment.

CBA involves collecting evidence and making a judgement of the extent to which a worker can perform his/her duties at the required competency standard. Where a trainee can already demonstrate a degree of competency, either due to prior training or work experience, a process of 'Recognition of Prior Learning' (RPL) is available to trainees to recognise this. Please speak to your trainer about RPL if you think this applies to you.

What is a competency standard?

Competency standards are descriptions of the skills and knowledge required to perform a task or activity at the level of a required standard.

242 competency standards for the tourism and hospitality industries throughout the ASEAN region have been developed to cover all the knowledge, skills and attitudes required to work in the following occupational areas:

- Housekeeping
- Food Production
- Food and Beverage Service
- Front Office

- Travel Agencies
- Tour Operations.

All of these competency standards are available for you to look at. In fact you will find a summary of each one at the beginning of each Trainee Manual under the heading 'Unit Descriptor'. The unit descriptor describes the content of the unit you will be studying in the Trainee Manual and provides a table of contents which are divided up into 'Elements' and 'Performance Criteria'. An element is a description of one aspect of what has to be achieved in the workplace. The 'Performance Criteria' below each element details the level of performance that needs to be demonstrated to be declared competent.

There are other components of the competency standard:

- Unit Title: statement about what is to be done in the workplace
- Unit Number: unique number identifying the particular competency
- Nominal hours: number of classroom or practical hours usually needed to complete the competency. We call them 'nominal' hours because they can vary e.g. sometimes it will take an individual less time to complete a unit of competency because he/she has prior knowledge or work experience in that area.

The final heading you will see before you start reading the Trainee Manual is the 'Assessment Matrix'. Competency based assessment requires trainees to be assessed in at least 2 – 3 different ways, one of which must be practical. This section outlines three ways assessment can be carried out and includes work projects, written questions and oral questions. The matrix is designed to show you which performance criteria will be assessed and how they will be assessed. Your trainer and/or assessor may also use other assessment methods including 'Observation Checklist' and 'Third Party Statement'. An observation checklist is a way of recording how you perform at work and a third party statement is a statement by a supervisor or employer about the degree of competence they believe you have achieved. This can be based on observing your workplace performance, inspecting your work or gaining feedback from fellow workers.

Your trainer and/or assessor may use other methods to assess you such as:

- Journals
- Oral presentations
- Role plays
- Log books
- Group projects
- Practical demonstrations.

Remember your trainer is there to help you succeed and become competent. Please feel free to ask him or her for more explanation of what you have just read and of what is expected from you and best wishes for your future studies and future career in tourism and hospitality.

Unit descriptor

Develop, implement and evaluate sponsorship plans

This unit deals with the skills and knowledge required to Develop, implement and evaluate sponsorship plans in a range of settings within the travel industries workplace context.

Unit Code:

D2.TCS.CL5.12

Nominal Hours:

60

Element 1: Identify the context for sponsorship activities

Performance Criteria

- 1.1 Identify and assess opportunities for engagement with sponsorship activities
- 1.2 Develop a budget for sponsorship activities
- 1.3 Determine the criteria for participating in sponsorship activities
- 1.4 Consider alternatives to participation in sponsorship
- 1.5 Seek support from suppliers and service providers for sponsorship activities
- 1.6 Establish protocols for monitoring participation in sponsorship activities
- 1.7 Set criteria against which to evaluate effectiveness of, and return from, sponsorship activities
- 1.8 Identify products and services that may be developed to align with sponsorship activities
- 1.9 Determine how requests for sponsorship that cannot be accommodated will be refused

Element 2: Develop sponsorship packages

Performance Criteria

- 2.1 Identify the elements of a sponsorship package that the organisation is prepared to support
- 2.2 Identify the products and services that may be offered as sponsorship
- 2.3 Define organisational expectations in relation to expected returns for different sponsorship packages
- 2.4 Identify the input required by the organisation into sponsorship arrangements
- 2.5 Develop and disseminate sponsorship information to potential partners

Element 3: Implement sponsorship packages

Performance Criteria

- 3.1 Confirm the details of the sponsorship the organisation is prepared to offer
- 3.2 Confirm the return the organisation will receive for its sponsorship
- 3.3 Negotiate additional opportunities as a result of the initial sponsorship
- 3.4 Complete contracts in relation to the sponsorship
- 3.5 Brief staff in relation to the sponsorship deal that has been entered into
- 3.6 Participate actively and willingly in the sponsored event/activity
- 3.7 Ensure the terms and conditions of the sponsorship agreement are discharged
- 3.8 Monitor the application of sponsorship contributions, as previously established
- 3.9 Record results and outcomes of participation in the sponsorship, as previously determined

Element 4: Evaluate involvement in the sponsorship

Performance Criteria

- 4.1 Assess the outcomes and results of the sponsorship against predetermined KPIs
- 4.2 Seek feedback on the sponsorship event or activity
- 4.3 Provide feedback to the organiser of the sponsorship event or activity
- 4.4 Determine whether similar sponsorship involvement will occur
- 4.5 Archive lessons learned from the sponsorship engagement for future reference

Assessment matrix

Showing mapping of Performance Criteria against Work Projects, Written Questions and Oral Questions

The Assessment Matrix indicates three of the most common assessment activities your Assessor may use to assess your understanding of the content of this manual and your performance - Work Projects, Written Questions and Oral Questions. It also indicates where you can find the subject content related to these assessment activities in the Trainee Manual (i.e. under which element or performance criteria). As explained in the Introduction, however, the assessors are free to choose which assessment activities are most suitable to best capture evidence of competency as they deem appropriate for individual students.

Element 1:

Identify the context for sponsorship activities

1.1 Identify and assess opportunities for engagement with sponsorship activities

Introduction

Sponsorship activities have become an important aspect of marketing and brand promotion in all industries nowadays. Identifying potential opportunities for sponsorship activities that can help to develop business requires an investigation and assessment of the benefits that sponsorship may provide as opposed to other promotional activities. It is important to make sure that any potential sponsorship opportunities align with organisational goals and culture.

Sponsorship Objectives

Lagae defines sponsorship as “a business agreement between two parties. The sponsor provides money, goods, services or know-how. In exchange, the sponsored party (individual, event or organisation) offers rights and associations that the sponsor utilizes commercially” (Lagae 2005, p. 35). Sponsorship activities have become an important promotional tool in which organisations expect to gain some sort of benefit. An organisation that utilises sponsorship activities is either attempting to gain a direct effect on customer behaviour or the enterprise is using sponsorship initiatives to increase brand and product awareness which ultimately leads to an increase in sales.

According to Jobber (2007) there are five major principals of sponsorship objective. These objectives include creating promotional opportunities, improving community relations, fostering favourable brand and company associations, creating entertainment opportunities and gaining publicity.

Creating promotional opportunities

- Sponsoring events is a great way for companies to promote their brands, logos and products (Jobber, 2007, p. 653). Items and products such as t-shirts, pens and bags can have a company's logo in order to reach a wider audience for easy retention and recognition.

Improving community relations

- Social responsibility is a factor of why companies get involved in sponsorship. Sponsorship of schools, environmental initiatives, and local traditional events can all help to boost the reputation of a company in its given community. This will give a caring and socially responsible image to the consumers (Jobber, 2007).

Fostering favourable brand and company associations

- This objective is linked to association for a company or brand according to Jobber (2007). The point is meant for a company to associate itself with an event and hopefully, the positivity of the event can be relayed to their products as well.

Creating entertainment opportunities

- Jobber also argues that companies sponsor events not only for publicity but also to reach out to customers that are highly placed in various fields. Successful employees also benefit from this as they are highly rewarded when top celebrities participate in an organized event.

Gaining publicity

- Sponsorship provides a good platform to reach millions of audience worldwide where some of them are likely to become customers due to the publicity provided by various media coverage internationally which aids in facilitating this process. Jobber also believes that sponsorship of certain major events like football aids in drastically producing awareness shifts for various products (ibid, pp. 653-655).

As new ideas emerge in relation to marketing and advertising, it has become common to link sponsorship with other promotional tools as can be seen in the diagram below. (Buhler & Nufer 2010, p. 99).

Identifying sponsorship opportunities

When companies commit themselves to sponsoring certain activity, they should always have clear reasons and objectives for their actions. Sponsorship goals should always be linked to promotional objectives and in a wider sense to the marketing objectives of the organization (Shank 2009, p. 333).

Shank (2009, p. 333) differentiates between direct and indirect sponsorship objectives. The direct sponsorship objective is expected to have an immediate impact on sales as well as impacting the level of the consumer behaviour. The indirect sponsorship objective on the other hand is regarded as a long-term commitment, which requires a high level of generating awareness and company image before the companies can reach their set indirect objectives.

There are many aspects of sponsorship initiatives that need to be considered in order to make the most of the activity. These include:

- Creating exclusivity where organisations negotiate a sponsoring or licensing agreement that would make the company an exclusive sponsor to an event. The advantage related to this type of sponsorship is a high level of exposure without having to worry about competitors' promotional activities
- Building goodwill through sponsorship activities is a great way of conducting business on a more personal basis in order to create a certain level of goodwill. Through the aid of hospitality and entertainment, an amicable business environment can be created which in turn can boost a company's image positively
- Relationship marketing where companies are involved in building long lasting relationships with their customers and at the same time seeking new innovative means in acquiring new lasting ones too. There are three main conditions under which relationship marketing is a productive and successful marketing approach. The first approach is the customer having an ongoing desire for some level of service. Secondly, the customer of the service tends to control the selection of the service supplier. Lastly, there are alternative service suppliers
- Increased sales which are ultimately the whole purpose of a sponsorship deal. When organizations consider investing in sponsorship contracts, they must initially assess their organizational objectives and marketing goals and then decide which form of sponsorship will aid in achieving them
- Competition may dictate that organisations engage themselves in sponsorship deals at times due to some level of threat from their competitors. It has been argued by many sponsors that this is the main reason for sponsorship activity. In other words, if they are not interested and fail to invest in sponsorship, then some of their competitors will; which will eventually lead to a market loss
- Image building is one of the most important aspects why organizations go into sponsorship deals either to build the organisations image or to maintain a high level image. It is mutually beneficial for both the identified entity and the sponsoring organisation whereby the latter, tends to associate itself or its brands with the positive images obtained by the unique personality of the chosen event or sponsorship activity
- Exploring existing relationships with business partners

- Responding to direct requests for sponsorship support for activities
- Ensuring opportunities for engagement align with company policies, image, values and mission as publicly stated
- Reviewing previous sponsorship activities and assessing their effectiveness.

1.2 Develop a budget for sponsorship activities

Introduction

The sponsorship activity budget is a projection (forecast) of the income and expenditure that the event will incur based on plans made and information gathered. The preparation of a budget is an essential part of sponsorship initiative management. It is fundamentally important to be able to predict with reasonable accuracy whether the activity will result in a profit, a loss or will break-even. This is achieved by identifying and costing all probable expenditures and by totalling all expected revenues (income). By comparing expenditures and revenues, it then becomes possible to forecast the financial outcome of the event.

The prediction of financial outcomes of the event needs to take place very early in the planning stages. There is no use on setting dates, booking venues, preparing plans until there has been some attempt to determine whether the event is financially viable.

What is a budget?

Developing a budget is an important part of any activity within an organisational context and participating in sponsorship activities requires a thorough investigation of the cost implications and revenue potential. A budget:

- Is a quantified statement of plan where the plan is expressed in numerical terms
- Process includes costing and estimating income
- Includes the allocation of financial resources to be used to compare costs and revenues with projected costs and revenues and to calculate maximum possible expenditure for each area of an event or activity
- Can take many forms

Budget process

Budget notes

Budgets usually also comprise 'Budget notes' sometimes referred to as 'Explanatory notes'.

Where they are used, they comprise numerous relatively short notes for (nearly) every budget figure. They function to tell the reader how the figures listed in the budget were arrived at. They explain the thinking of the person(s) who set the budget at the outset, and present the rationale behind the budget decisions/figures that were finally utilised. This means they will not only state the expected increases or falls in certain areas, but explain why they think this will occur.

The notes assist understanding of the overall budget by including the thought processes which underpinned the decision making at the time: their inclusion is beneficial as it gives the raw statistics a basis in real life, and demonstrates how the stated expectations were arrived at.

Budget line items

Within a budget there can be a variety of 'budget lines' or 'line items'.

These are specific types of expenditure or income and they are distinguished to help management monitor how individual expenses and revenues are performing. For example, the organisation may have individual budget lines (and codes) for different product lines, services, and events or activities.

To help process entries to different line items, each one is usually allocated a unique code which is used when making data entries into the accounting system.

Anything that is a plan (or in a plan) for the business, should have a budget.

Examples of budgets to consider

Budgets can come in a wide variety of types. It is likely no two enterprises have exactly the same budgets or budget lines. Budgets you may need to consider when determining your sponsorship goals will include:

- Sales budget (revenue) – can cover all sales, or there may be a number of subsidiary income budgets such as:
- Catering and functions/food and beverage
- Merchandise sales
- Labour budget (expenditure) – details costs of hiring, administrators, managers and staff/employees
- Overhead budget (expenditure) – which details all costs not directly associated with labour, or the production of the goods/services being sold (such as rent, rates)
- Cash budget – estimating cash flow, cash outflow and the overall cash position of the Club

Note the one 'item' may appear as both an income item and an expense – for example:

- Courses – you may receive money for conducting courses, and you may need to pay money so members can attend courses conducted by someone else.
- Membership – members pay fees to the Club, and the Club may need to pay fees itself to belong to other bodies or associations.

Need for budgets

Businesses and Clubs use budgets in many ways:

As planning tools – a budget can be seen as a guide, a map of the upcoming period in a financial sense. It tells you where you are going to be, how you expect to get there, and how you are progressing on your journey to that destination.

To demonstrate due diligence and proper corporate governance

To make certain departments, people or aspects of the Club more responsible and/or accountable for their actions/behaviour in terms of spending money or raising funds – this also sees budgets function as a motivator

As a basis for controlling and analysing the financial performance of the Club – so better decisions can be made and (where necessary) remedial action can be taken to address unacceptable financial situations/results

To maintain the reputation of the Club by ensuring money is available to pay accounts/bills when they fall due.

Budget considerations for sponsorship activities

Unlike budgeting for product development activities, sponsorship budgeting is often linked to benefits other than financial gains. Sponsorship can help to boost brand image, motivate staff, and influence the perception of customers about the organisation. In developing a budget for sponsorship activities it is important to identify potential benefits that may be non-financial. It is important to:

- Determine and set financial parameters for engagement with sponsorship activities. This may include reviewing previous sponsorship activities and identifying costs versus benefits
- Determine non-financial support that may be made available to partners, including use of enterprise staff, use of facilities, information and knowledge sharing, joint advertising and promotion, provision of free and/or discounted products and services. It is important to evaluate the costs associated with providing access to the enterprise operation as this sponsorship activity may require a lot of support which may negatively impact on regular operations
- Schedule engagement with sponsorship opportunities to align with relevant cash flow restrictions. Identifying appropriate times to engage in sponsorship activities is critical for the success of the event. It is not effective to schedule a sponsorship activity when cash flow is limited or when normal operations are at a peak
- Establish internal budgets and resource allocation protocols so as to not negatively impact on regular operations
- Notify internal personnel regarding limitations placed on sponsorships. There may be limits on budget set by management or scheduling guidelines that may influence when sponsorship events can take place.

1.3 Determine the criteria for participating in sponsorship activities

Introduction

When becoming involved in a financial sponsorship/partnership marketing activity, it is critical to make sure that you act with integrity, honesty, objectivity and impartiality – in line with the enterprise's policies. It is also important to ensure that sponsorship/partnership marketing is the best method for achieving company aims. A crucial process in the sponsorship activity is to develop clear criteria against which the appropriateness of a sponsor/partner can be judged.

Determine criteria for sponsorship participation

Before setting guidelines for sponsorship activity participations, it is useful to consider some ideas that may impact on the activities success or failure:

- Will sponsorship dilute the organisation's operations?
- Communications activity should exist outside any sponsorship/partnership support. Sponsorship marketing should be used only to enhance the operations – not to create them. Sponsorship marketing activity is also likely to be more successful as part of a wider awareness-raising campaign that incorporates other media activity
- Could there be any justifiable cause for complaint – from either the public or the media – if the sponsorship/partnership goes ahead?

It is important to determine the parameters for selecting certain sponsorship activities which could include:

- Relevance of the sector for the specific message or outcome of activity
- Its demographic relevance and synergy with the audience
- The partner's ethics (e.g. child labour)
- The partners financial record (is the organisation viable or currently under investigation for example by
- Its relationship with the organisation as a whole (e.g. is it involved in any significant commercial negotiations with any other outlet or part of the organisation?)
- It is also prudent to monitor public opinion towards sponsors/partners on an ongoing basis
- Has sponsorship been sought in an open and even-handed way? A selected sponsor's/partner's competitors should not be able to say that they were not given a chance to be involved
- Is the relationship between the organisation and sponsorship partner appropriate?
- Should exclusivity be offered to sponsors/partners?
- Ultimate responsibility for approving approaches to sponsors/partners lies with management, and should be checked by policy and communications teams

- Timing and duration of the activity needs to be clearly stated and agreed
- Nature of the activity, including consideration of existing targeting of clients to achieve stated business goals, the image of the event as it aligns with company image, and appraisal of celebrities and similar who may be involved in the activity. It is important to analyse the details of the sponsorship activity clearly and carefully
- Potential for marketplace exposure and promotion of the business. What benefits will the organisation gain from the activity?
- Potential to generate additional sales or clients. Is there a potential to increase sales and revenue or is there an alternative marketing or promotional activity that could be more effective?
- Potential disadvantages associated with not participating in a sponsorship opportunity. It is possible that negative communications could result from not supporting a sponsorship activity especially if competitor organisations are involved
- Activities being undertaken by the competition in terms of their participation in the activity. How are competitors engaging in the sponsorship activity? Is there a different way of sponsoring that could utilise the activity more effectively?
- Whether the activity is one-off in nature, including analysis of the duration of the required commitment to the activity. Is the sponsorship activity connected to other ongoing or future events?
- Determination of the personnel responsible for making sponsorship-related decisions. Is there a sponsorship committee or specific managers that are the decision-makers?
- Specific objectives as determined by the organisation that arise from time-to-time. Company goals or opportunities may change and a sponsorship activity may align with a new organisational objective.

1.4 Consider alternatives to participation in sponsorship

Introduction

It is important to carefully consider the proposed sponsorship activity in relation to other promotional or marketing activities. There are many reasons why participation in sponsorship events may be effective but identifying the benefits or potential disadvantages is a crucial step in deciding to engage in the activity or not. Considering alternatives to a suggested sponsorship activity may actually identify the benefits of the activity but it may also show that there are more advantageous effective activities other than sponsorship engagement.

What alternatives should be considered?

There is no point in participating in sponsorship activities if the activity is not going to provide any benefits to the organisation. As has been seen in previous sections, benefits do not always have to be directly linked to revenue but if existing operational activities can be enhanced or modified to produce the same or a better result, then this must be considered. In analysing alternatives, there are several options that need to be considered. These could include:

- Increasing or varying existing promotion strategies. All enterprises are engaged in marketing and promotional activities and it is important to investigate the possibility of utilising existing promotional strategies before participating in sponsorship activities. This could involve developing new marketing campaigns or altering current promotional strategies to respond to market needs. This may be more cost effective and ultimately more successful than undertaking sponsorship activities.
- Enhancing public relations where the organisation communicates its mission and products more effectively within the market. This may include building upon existing relationships and providing more information to stakeholders.
- Increasing or varying existing advertising, including consideration of different mediums, frequency and placement. Existing advertising channels may already be effective and it might be more prudent to utilise these advertising mediums to increase sales. There may be other media sources that could be utilised which could be more than or equally as beneficial as sponsorship activities.
- Lowering selling prices. This is always an option that can lead to increased sales but it has to be considered carefully. Promotional rates linked to a time of the year or a special event may be more cost effective than entering into a sponsorship arrangement.
- Developing new products and services may also be an effective strategy that utilises existing staff and resources.

Activity

Activity: In small groups, discuss the alternatives listed and any others you can think of. Which alternative is the best option in your opinion?

1.5 Establish protocols for monitoring participation in sponsorship activities

Introduction

There are many different stakeholders that could be approached to support sponsorship activities. Support could vary from financial support to facility and equipment use but identifying potential options for extra support can lead to an effective sponsorship activity. The benefits to the organisation can also extend beyond the activity itself by enhancing existing relationships with suppliers and service providers.

Seeking support

There are many different stakeholders connected to any organisation and it is not only important to consider what the organisation is contributing to stakeholders but it is critical to identify and encourage stakeholder contribution to the enterprise. Sponsorship activities provide an opportunity for stakeholders to show their commitment to the organisation by actively participating in the event. Financial assistance is often the main support option offered to stakeholders but there are many other types of support that service providers and suppliers can provide. The first step is to identify who the organisation's stakeholders are and then to determine what type of support is needed and what each stakeholder could provide.

Stakeholders could include:

- Staff
- Owners
- Customers and clients
- Suppliers
- Service providers
- Government and industry bodies
- Local community.

Depending on the type of sponsorship activity, different types of support could be required. For example, staff could volunteer to assist the activity in their own time. Owners may offer financial support, their own time or allow use of the facilities. Customers and clients could provide money or their experience/skills such as a doctor being available for first aid duties. Suppliers might provide their products at a reduced rate or free of charge in exchange for advertising opportunities. Government bodies could be asked for funding support.

Seeking support process

It may be effective to follow a step by step process in order to gather support from different stakeholders. It is important to know what is required for the sponsorship activity before approaching suppliers and service providers in order to be clear about what they could do to assist the activity. It may be useful to prioritise the support needed as well. Below is a guideline that could be used to seek support from stakeholders effectively.

Activity

List all of the stakeholders connected to your organisation. What kind of support could they provide for sponsorship activities?

1.6 Establish protocols for monitoring participation in sponsorship activities

Introduction

The decision to engage in sponsorship activities requires a lot of thought and planning and it is also necessary to monitor the progress of the activity once it begins. One of the initial steps in undertaking sponsorship activities is to determine the objective of the activity and it is important to establish guidelines for monitoring the progress of the activity in order to ensure all aspects and commitments of the event are met. These protocols should be developed before engaging in the sponsorship activity and everyone involved with the activity should be informed of them.

Establishing protocols

It would be ineffective to undertake sponsorship activities without being able to identify if the activities are progressing as planned. Developing a system to monitor the performance of the activities is an important aspect of managing sponsorship activities successfully. Establishing protocols for monitoring sponsorship activities enables the organisation to track the progress of the activity and to document different aspects of the activity management which in turn can assist in future sponsorship activities. There are many different aspects of the sponsorship activity that need to be tracked and checked including:

- Identifying staff and/or external agencies to track the use of resources supplied. It is important to be able to monitor what resources are being used and how they are being used in order to identify if the sponsorship activity is meeting the contract stipulations
- Establishing internal records to record the results of involvement in individual sponsorship activities. Developing a system to record the actions performed during the sponsorship activity provides evidence to be examined after the event has been completed
- Preparing internal forms and systems to facilitate tracking the type and volume of resources committed to, and provided for, sponsorship activities. It is important to be able to examine exactly what and how many resources were assigned to any sponsorship activity. This enables the organisation to see if the activity plan matches the actual delivery of the event
- Undertaking scheduled visits to sites and events where sponsorship has been provided. It is important to check that the sponsorship activity is progressing as anticipated and this may require several visits to the event location. These visits help to keep the activity on target and aligned to the plan
- Archiving evidence of the exposure and mention that the organisation receives as a result of its engagement with every sponsorship activity. Keeping information about sponsorship activities helps to provide guidelines for future activities which leads to improvements and more successful events.

1.7 Set criteria against which to evaluate effectiveness of, and return from, sponsorship activities

Introduction

Developing a set of guidelines to measure the effectiveness of sponsorship activities is a critical aspect of the event organisation. It is important to know what is going to be evaluated and how it will be measured before engaging in the activity. Quite a lot of thought needs to go into this evaluation criterion in order to make sure it is appropriate.

Evaluating sponsorship outcomes

It is possible to approach sponsorship activity evaluation from two perspectives; a public relations approach and an advertising and marketing approach. In the public relations approach, the evaluation of effectiveness is focused on aspects such as number of brand mentions, market logo responses and social media exposure and activity. The advertising and marketing approach utilises surveys to determine effectiveness of the activity by investigating customer attitudes and perceptions. In evaluating the effectiveness of sponsorship activities, it is important to observe the management process as well as the measurement. Michael Hammer (2007) points out that it is critical to be aware of potential negative measurement influences that could impact on the overall evaluation. These include:

- Vanity - the selection of measures that make management look good
- Provincialism - keeping within organizational or industry boundaries when new measures are needed
- Narcissism - measuring from one's own point of view, not that of the customer
- Laziness - assuming one knows what to measure without giving it thought
- Pettiness - measuring a small subset of what should be measured
- Inanity - measuring without thought of how measurement or actions based on it will influence the organization
- Frivolity - not being serious about measuring.

Criteria for evaluating effectiveness

Ambler et al (2002) describes five customer marketing changes that could be used to measure sponsorship effectiveness which include:

- Brand awareness - the extent and ease to which customers recall and recognise the brand and can identify the products and services with which it is associated
- Brand associations - the strength, favourability, and uniqueness of perceived attributes and benefits for the brand and firm
- Brand attitudes - overall evaluations of the brand in terms of its quality and the satisfaction it generates

- Brand attachment - how loyal the customer feels toward the brand
- Brand experience - the extent to which customers use the brand; talk to others about the brand; seek out brand information, promotions, and events.

There are many different measurements that can be used to evaluate the effectiveness of sponsorship activities including:

- Extent to which actual exposure matches promised/agreed exposure. It is important to analyse the results against the predicted results in order to determine if the activity was successful or not
- Classification and quantification of exposure by column inches, minutes and other criteria by various media outlets. The measurement details need to be quite specific and clear in order to analyse the results against normal marketing and advertising activities
- Key Performance Indicators (KPIs) which may include:
 - Number of new clients sourced and entered on databases, including initial quantification of existing statistics prior to engagement with the sponsorship activity
 - Sales, including advanced bookings received, and analysis of sales statistics by identified category
 - Other specific and quantified targets deemed relevant to the organisation at the time
 - Enquiries made to the business as a result of the sponsorship exposure, including establishment of dedicated contact numbers for sponsorship-related enquiries or purchases
- Change in perception about the business, including image, market position and its products and services following the sponsorship activity. This data may require surveys and questionnaires to be developed and it is important that they gather appropriate and useful information that truly identifies the change.

1.8 Identify products and services that may be developed to align with sponsorship activities

Introduction

As has been identified in earlier units, it is important to identify the outcomes that are wanted from engaging in sponsorship activities. It is possible to develop products and services that relate directly to the proposed sponsorship initiative, which can lead to financial and other benefits to the organisation as a whole. These initiatives could involve the development of new products and services or the promotion of existing products and services.

Developing appropriate products and services

There are many potential benefits and opportunities related to engaging in sponsorship activities and it may be possible to enhance the sponsorship activity results or outcomes by developing or promoting products and services that align with the initiative. It may be that the sponsorship activity has been chosen because of the strong synergy between existing products and services and the activity itself. Identifying and developing products and services that align with sponsorship activities could include:

- Modifying existing products and services, including changes to destinations, inclusions, promotions, timing, duration, accommodation type and style, and travel options. Modifying existing products may be much easier than creating new products or services but it is important to make sure that the products and services truly align with the activity. If there is no real connection between the products and services and the sponsorship activity, negative impacts could result
- Introducing new products, services or packages to align with the event. It may be possible to introduce new products and services that could leverage off the sponsorship activity but it is important to examine the costs and potential benefits of this action
- Developing one-off products and services only available to coincide with the sponsorship event or activity. If the development of new products and services is costly or requires a lot of training, then it may be more effective to just promote the sponsorship activity alone. However, if there is an opportunity to offer a new product or service for the duration of the sponsorship activity, then this may be advantageous to the overall outcomes of the activity
- Re-titling of packages to reflect the sponsorship activity. This is a relatively simple option and could help increase sales of an existing service or product just by associating it with the sponsorship activity
- Partnering other businesses in creating a joint venture product
- Providing a discount for purchasers participating in, or aligning with, the sponsored event or activity. This is also a relatively simple way to add value to a sponsorship activity. It helps to market existing products and services but also limits the promotion to a fixed time.

1.9 Determine how requests for sponsorship that cannot be accommodated will be refused

Introduction

Obviously, it is impossible to accept every request to participate in sponsorship activities. This may be due to timing, cost, lack of resources or non-alignment with organisational goals and strategies. Although a sponsorship activity may not be possible at a certain time, it is important to refuse a request for sponsorship in a polite and supportive manner as there may be benefits in engaging in future sponsorship activities with the partner.

Refusing sponsorship requests

For many organisations, participation in sponsorship activities is a great asset to a marketing plan. Working with a sponsored event can bring great exposure — not just through the event attendees, but also through the resulting press, online and social media response that follows.

When planning a sponsorship event, coordinators will often seek participation from various businesses. And although your organisation would like to participate in certain events, it may not be the right time to do so, for whatever reason. As a commercially operating organisation, a very common dilemma that is faced is knowing when and how to politely decline sponsorship requests. However, it is possible to turn many of the requests that are declined into a win-win situation for both parties: increased marketing and lead generation for your company, and support for a worthy cause.

If you don't know how to say "no," here's how to keep the business direction straight and organisational conscience clear:

State your reason for declining. If you give the sponsorship partner a valid reason for declining — i.e. budget reasons, schedule conflict, etc. — it will be easier for them to empathise and to take "no" for an answer without putting you on their blacklist. It may be appropriate to start by thanking them for considering the organisation, then follow that up with an apologetic reason why the enterprise is unable to take part. An example form of this would be along the lines of: "Regrettably, we are unable to participate in your event at this time due to [insert your reason here]."

Completely decline to do the event. There will be times when, for whatever reason, you simply need to pass on the opportunity at the time. In this case, keep it simple, letting them know you'll have to pass at this time. Thank them and let them know to contact you for future opportunities to get involved.

In determining how to refuse sponsorship requests, it may be necessary to consider:

- Preparing standard 'thanks and regret' letters identifying the other activities that the organisation engages in. Developing templates enables a clear and consistent message to be communicated to other organisations when refusing requests for sponsorship activities

- Explaining how the application for sponsorship does not meet the identified criteria of the business. This is an important aspect of refusing requests which allows the requesting party to understand the reasons why the activity is not favourable at a certain time. The requesting organisation is then able to identify what they may need to do to alter future sponsorship activity requests
- Working with applicants to re-formulate their application or activity in order for it to qualify for sponsorship. It may be identified by the organisation that a sponsorship application does not fit within the company guidelines but the overall idea may be aligned with the enterprise's goals. If this is the case, the organisation can work with the sponsorship applicant to alter the application to fit the organisation's stipulations
- Appointing and training personnel to deal with such instances. It is important that staff know how to respond appropriately to refusing requests for sponsorship activities so as not to upset an applicant and also to leave a positive impression of the organisation. Having trained staff to deal with these situations helps ensure a positive outcome for all parties involved
- Identifying a supplementary contribution that may be offered where other more substantial sponsorship cannot be made, including organisational merchandise, and nominated discounts. Often a sponsorship activity will have many different components and opportunities for some form of participation other than full sponsorship. Identifying less significant ways to contribute can still have a beneficial outcome for both enterprises and alternatives to substantial sponsorship should always be explored as an option
- Ensuring the negative response of the organisation leaves a positive result in the eyes of the individual or organisation making the request. This should be the main goal of refusing a request. It is possible to create a positive outcome and for the applicant to consider the organisation for future sponsorship activities.

Work Projects

It is a requirement of this Unit you complete Work Projects as advised by your Trainer. You must submit documentation, suitable evidence or other relevant proof of completion of the project to your Trainer by the agreed date.

- 1.1 Identify one sponsorship activity that your organisation has participated in:
 - What were the objectives of the activity? Explain to your trainer.
 - 1.2. Bring an example of a budget from an activity or event from your organisation:
 - Describe the details to your trainer.
 - 1.3. Provide an example of an event that any organisation sponsors and explain to your trainer how that sponsorship activity aligns with the organisation's operations:
 - You can use an example from your own organisation if available.
 - 1.4. Provide your trainer with an example of when your organisation refused participation in a sponsorship activity:
 - Alternatively, explain to your trainer why an organisation may not want to join a sponsorship event.
 - 1.5 Identify 3 providers or stakeholders connected to your organisation that could assist with a sponsorship activity:
 - Explain to your trainer how their services or products could be used.
 - 1.6 Provide a statement of protocols or procedures about your organisation's participation in sponsorship activities:
 - If not available, search for examples from the internet from other organisations and provide to your trainer. Describe some of the procedures or protocols to your trainer.
 - 1.7 Provide 3 examples of KPI's to your trainer:
 - They can relate to sponsorship activities or other aspects of work performance.
 - 1.8 List five products or services that your organisation provides:
 - Describe them to your trainer.
 - 1.9 Provide your trainer with an example of a letter of refusal to participate on an event:
 - If the organisation does not have an example, write an appropriate example yourself and show your trainer.

Summary

Identify the context for sponsorship activities

Participating in sponsorship activities can be an excellent marketing opportunity for any organisation but it is important to consider many aspects of engaging in an event before committing to it. Specifically it is important to:

- Identify the potential benefits to the organisation
- Consider the costs versus benefits
- Make sure that the sponsorship activity aligns with the company's goals and vision
- Consider other alternatives to sponsorship activities
- Identify and approach any providers or other stakeholders connected to the organisation that may be able to support the event
- Have guidelines that outline how the organisation engages with sponsorship events
- Identify the expected benefits that the enterprise will achieve from engaging in the event
- Be able to identify which products and services from the organisation that align with the sponsorship activity
- Have a standard polite refusal letter that can be sent to sponsorship organisers if it is deemed that the activity is not useful for the organisation.

Element 2: Develop sponsorship packages

2.1 Identify the elements of a sponsorship package that the organisation is prepared to support

Introduction

There are many different elements to a sponsorship package. These details can range from sponsorship of an entire event to providing discounts for the sponsorship applicant's participants. It is important for the organisation to determine the parts of a sponsorship package that align with the enterprise's marketing strategy. Identifying products and services that could leverage off sponsorship activities is also a useful process to enlist.

Different elements of sponsorship packages

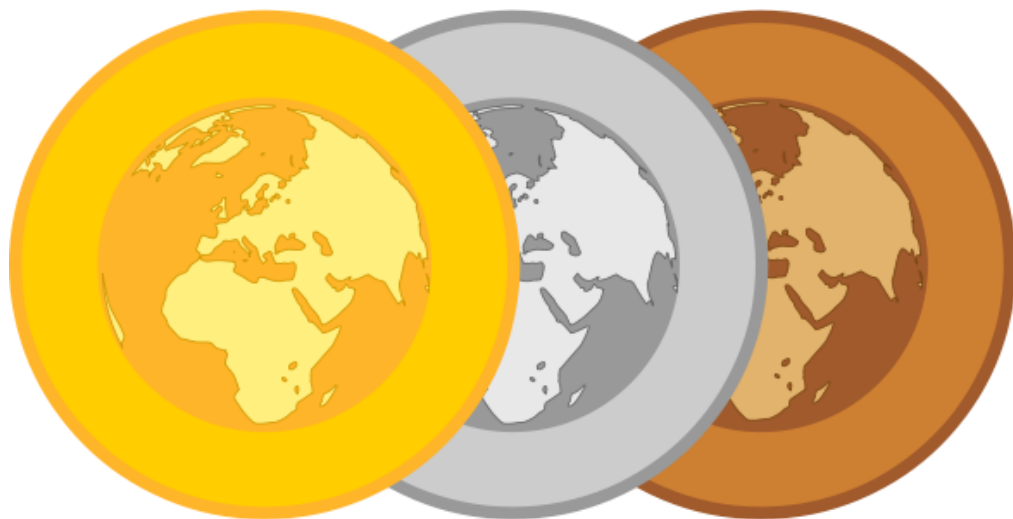

Identifying which parts of a sponsorship package are the most attractive to the organisation depends on many factors. The elements of the package may align with certain products and services or the entire event may relate to the organisation's marketing strategy and it is the process of identifying these components that is critical to engaging in successful sponsorship activities. It is important to analyse the resources needed, the costs and the benefits in order to choose the most advantageous aspects of the package.

Four common sponsorship packages include:

- Level playing field: where each sponsor is given equal rights and benefits. There is usually only one sponsor per category and the payment for the right to sponsor is dependent upon the competition for that category
- Hierarchical: this is based upon the amount paid. The more the organisation pays the more rights and benefits they get. For example, Principal Sponsor, Major Sponsor, Minor Sponsor, Official Supplier or Gold, Silver, Bronze sponsors. There may be more than one sponsor in each level, such as, 2 Gold, 4 Silver and 8 Bronze sponsors
- Sole: where the one sponsor has access to all rights and benefits. It should provide premium opportunities because of the exclusivity
- Ad hoc: this is where each package provides different benefits to the sponsors and varying returns to the sponsoree. For example, a morning tea sponsor, a bag sponsor or a session sponsor.

In choosing parts of a sponsorship package, it may be useful to consider engaging in:

- Overall event sponsorship. This option can provide significant marketing opportunities to an organisation but it can also be costly. It is important to assess the benefits versus costs
- Naming rights where the organisation's name is attached to the event or activity title. For example, the Nutri-Grain Iron Man contest or Kia World Extreme Games
- Nominated activities within the overall sponsorship event, including meals, accommodation, travel, entertainment, guest speakers, social events, promotion and advertising which are all examples of ad-hoc sponsorship packaging
- Contribution of unacknowledged support. This is when an organisation wants to support the activity without letting the public know. This package might be chosen when the organisation wants to show support for the event organisers but may not wish to communicate participation to a wider audience
- Provision of 'in principle' support only. This may just be like an endorsement or statement showing support for the sponsorship activity but nothing else
- Introductions to other individuals and/or businesses that may provide sponsorship. Hospitality and tourism organisations all develop extensive networks and it may be impossible for one organisation to sponsor an event because of many reasons but another stakeholder may be able to participate in the activity. This is an effective way to turn a refusal to participate into a positive result or impression.

2.2 Identify the products and services that may be offered as sponsorship

Introduction

After determining what level of sponsorship the organisation is prepared to commit to, it is necessary to identify what actual products and services will be offered. As has been previously discussed, there are many different ways that an organisation can participate in sponsorship activities and it is important to ensure that what is offered is linked to the overall goals and objectives of the organisation, as well as offering value for money.

Which products and services to offer?

There are so many different types of products and services that could be offered to support sponsorship activities, that it is important to understand the cost and potential return of each. Supporting sponsorship activities does not always have to include offering financial contributions and there are creative ways to utilise products and services that may be considered more valuable by the event organisers than the organisation realises. Facilities, staff, equipment could all be deemed useful support so it is important to identify what products and services are available and helpful for the activity. An organisation could provide:

- Financial assistance, including cash contributions, discounts, and rebates. This is often the first item on the list for sponsorship applicants - money. It is also one of the least desirable options for many organisations and it is important to consider the value of cash contributions. Discounts or promotional rates for customers linked to the sponsorship activity can be an excellent option and should be considered as it encourages new customers or existing customers to use the organisation's products and services which can lead to increased business
- Merchandising items such as bags, caps, pens, t-shirts featuring company name and/or logo. This is a great way to advertise the brand and can have a longer-term impact as the sponsorship products may be used for some time after the event. Again, cost versus benefit needs to be considered
- Advertising material, including posters, banners and various point-of-sale materials
- Tours, trips, packages and other products or services from the offerings available, including provision of products and services that have been obtained from suppliers and service providers who support the business, such as meals, accommodation, travel, entry to attractions. Drawing upon networks and providers connected to the organisation can also be very attractive and beneficial for sponsorship organisers. It may be difficult for the sponsorship group to approach certain suppliers and the organisation may be able to offer an introduction and encourage suppliers to participate in the activity
- Advice and information. The organisation's experience may be valuable to the activity
- Personnel to assist with the planning and/or conduct of the sponsored event. This can be a significant contribution to the success of the event and should be considered as an alternative for sponsorship activity support.

2.3 Define organisational expectations in relation to expected returns for different sponsorship packages

Introduction

There is always some sort of benefit to the organisation expected from participation in a sponsorship activity. As has been identified in previous units, these benefits vary greatly but they will also depend on the type of sponsorship package that is agreed upon. The levels of commitment of each aspect of the sponsorship package must be determined and specifically outlined in order to be able to identify the expected returns for the organisation.

Defining organisational expectations

- Nominating the types of packages available, such as Gold, Silver or Bronze. There may be different levels of support that the organisation can agree to and it is important to determine these different options before committing to the sponsorship activity
- Prescribing the total value of each package. It is especially important to outline the total value of each sponsorship package in order to be clear about what commitment is required and to determine all of the costs and benefits of the package
- Nominating the products and services that are included in each package. It is necessary to clarify exactly what will be included in each package as adding extra support could negatively impact on the expected benefit and it is important for all stakeholders to understand what the organisation is obligated to provide
- Describing and quantifying organisational expectations in relation to the provision of each package, in relation to sales, contacts made, general public exposure, media exposure, naming rights, product placement, size, type and placement of host enterprise promotional material, and absence of industry competitors, or requirements regarding proximity of competitors to host enterprise materials. It is a critical step in the sponsorship process to determine exactly what the organisation expects to achieve from participation in the activity. Outlining the details of objectives allows the results to be measured after the activity has been completed and to gauge the overall value of participation in the event
- Explaining to organisers exactly what the sponsorship covers and exactly what it is expected to achieve for the business. The organisers need to be clear about what the organisation is expecting to achieve and to know what the sponsorship package includes so as to not move beyond the agreed support. The sponsorship organisers can also help to promote the organisation if they are clear about the desired outcomes for the enterprise
- Identifying the provision of complementary invitations to the event or activity, including seats, meals and tickets for use by the host enterprise and seats for distribution to other clients.

2.4 Identify the input required by the organisation into sponsorship arrangements

Introduction

The amount of input required for a sponsorship activity can vary quite significantly ranging from little or no input to active involvement in all aspects of the event. Determining the amount of work needed to participate in the sponsorship activity is an important part of the process in order to clearly outline the work that is required by the organisation. Identifying the exact amount and type of input needed for the sponsorship activity allows the organisation to determine the resources that are also needed and when and how to use them.

What support is required?

The amount of input required may vary greatly depending on the type of sponsorship activity that the organisation is participating in. Obviously, the easiest option would be to not have to do anything but this is not always possible. The sponsorship activity may require staff resources, equipment set-up and use, or facility use and each activity may require specialist staff to support. Identifying what input is required from the organisation is a critical process and it needs to be considered carefully and realistically. The amount of work required could range from:

- Zero input where the sponsorship organisers conduct the entire event or activity by themselves. The organisation may just provide space or use of facilities
- Participation in planning and implementation to varying degrees ranging from an advisory capacity through to a seat on the committee and involvement in the decision making processes. If the sponsorship organisers are not experienced in delivering the event or activity, the hosting organisation may need to take a leading role in the sponsorship activity planning and implementation. It is important to identify how much help and what type of assistance may be needed in order to ensure the success of the event
- Decisions relating to the placement of host enterprise promotional material and product. It is important to get as much exposure as possible from participating in a sponsorship activity, so identifying where to place promotional material and products is something that must be considered carefully. It may be necessary to work closely with the organisers to determine the best way to promote the organisation
- Decisions relating to the involvement of competitors with sponsorship of the same event or activity. There may be other organisations involved with the sponsorship activity and it is important to examine what their commitments are. This may include identifying where and what promotional material other sponsors are providing, what services or products they are offering, and are there any conflicts or synergies which may affect the organisation.

2.5 Develop and disseminate sponsorship information to potential partners

Introduction

When an organisation decides to become involved with a sponsorship activity, it has determined that there is a benefit to the organisation that can be achieved. If there are benefits to the organisation, there is also the possibility that other stakeholders or partners could benefit from engaging in the sponsorship event. Distributing information regarding the activity to suppliers and other stakeholders allows for increased participation in the activity which can also lead to a more successful event.

What information should be communicated?

Increased exposure is often a desired outcome from participation in sponsorship activities and finding options to include more partners or stakeholders in an event can help to increase the awareness or participation in an event. Once the organisation has agreed to take part in sponsorship activities, it is important to develop information relating to the activity and to make this available to different stakeholders. Encouraging other organisations to join the sponsorship activity is helpful for the organising party but it is also helpful for suppliers and other business partners who may also appreciate the marketing opportunity. It is necessary to provide information about the activity which could include:

- Preparing hard copy information that explains to targeted individuals and organisations what sponsorship is available from the host enterprise. This will help other potential sponsors to decide if they would like to participate in the activity
- Forwarding sponsorship information kits to strategically targeted event and activity organisers. This provides an opportunity for experienced partners to contribute their resources to the activity which may help to make the event more successful
- Explaining sponsorship availability and requirements in response to enquiries generated. It is important to be able to respond appropriately to any partners that would like some information about the sponsorship activity. It is therefore necessary to be prepared for any enquiries and to have all of the relevant details ready
- Encouraging event organisers to apply for sponsorship. Through various organisational networks it may be possible to identify partners that are willing to take part in the sponsorship activity and alerting the sponsorship organisers to other potential sponsors can be extremely helpful for the success of the event.

Work Projects

It is a requirement of this Unit you complete Work Projects as advised by your Trainer. You must submit documentation, suitable evidence or other relevant proof of completion of the project to your Trainer by the agreed date.

- 2.1 Show your trainer a list of different sponsorship packages that your organisation has offered:
 - Explain the levels to your trainer.
 - 2.2 List 4 products or services that have been included as sponsorship activities from your organisation.
 - 2.3 Show your trainer an example of expected benefits from a sponsorship activity that your organisation engaged in.
 - 2.4 Provide your trainer with an example of a resource list/plan that was utilised for a sponsorship event within your organisation including:
 - Staff resources
 - Cash contribution
 - Facility and equipment use.
 - 2.5 Show you trainer examples of marketing materials from your organisation:
 - Do any include advertising for partners or sponsorship engagement?

Summary

Develop sponsorship packages

Engaging in sponsorship activities successfully requires a lot of planning and effort. It is critical for the organisation to identify the activities that they will contribute and to outline the expected benefits that the organisation hopes to achieve. These expected results need to be clearly identified and expressed in measurable ways as much as possible in order to be able to evaluate the success or failure of the event later. Sponsorship activities can include:

- Varying levels of commitment
- Different products and services contributed by the organisation
- A list of expected outcomes that are detailed and measurable
- Collaboration with other providers and stakeholders connected to the organisation.

Element 3: Implement sponsorship packages

3.1 Confirm the details of the sponsorship the organisation is prepared to offer

Introduction

It is important to be clear about exactly what the organisation is prepared to offer in terms of the sponsorship activity and all parties involved need to confirm their support. The details of the support may vary greatly but it is important to outline quantities, timing, resource use, facility and equipment use and to be specific so that there are no misunderstandings.

Sponsor detail confirmation

Sponsor recognition may be seen as the total of the things the sponsorship organisers do to benefit and promote the sponsorship participants they have secured.

Confirming the details of sponsorship activities helps to ensure that the organisation achieves all of the benefits outlined in the agreement for participation and that both parties deliver on all the contracted activities listed in the sponsorship contract and add value to the relationship through working together in the activity itself.

When confirming sponsorship activity details, it is important to confirm:

- Identification and description of all levels of sponsorship offered by the organisation – this refers to how the different sponsorship levels are classified (in effect, ‘packages’) that will be offered.

Most sponsorship events seem to offer three levels (high, medium and low) each with names indicating their relative position in the overall scheme – for example:

- Gold, silver and bronze
- Platinum, gold and silver
- Blue, red and white
- Mega, major and minor.

Each level may have a dollar value attached to it to enable differentiation between each classification and it is important that the amount is confirmed.

The dollar value may refer to cash sponsorship and/or conversions of in-kind sponsorship:

- List of benefits attached to each level – this describes what the sponsor will get for their money.

Benefits contained in lower level classifications are always included in the benefits provided for all higher-level categories.

When confirming what is included in the packages at each level it must be remembered there is a cost attached to providing everything the organisation offers.

Note: the reality is this is always subject to negotiation.

Period of sponsorship – aligning each level with a time period

Common options are:

- Multiple years
- Annual
- Season (for a sport team)
- An event, series or game
- Again, this is always open to negotiation.

Identifying costs of providing benefits in benefit packages

A proper determination of sponsorship levels can only take place when you are fully aware of the cost to the organisation of providing each of the benefits.

In some cases it is difficult to determine who has responsibility for certain costs – unless these are specifically agreed beforehand or are specifically covered by the contract.

For example, it may be ambiguous as to who produces the signage which will be displayed at the event, or who is responsible for paying for advertising material in order to show off the organisation's name and logo. It is critical to be specific and to confirm these details. Identifying costs is a challenge as:

- It is difficult, if not impossible, to identify all the relevant costs
- It is difficult, if not impossible, to assign a realistic/truly representative value to each identified cost.

This said, an effort must be made to at least gain some appreciation for the costs involved in providing the package/s that have been agreed to.

Depending on the nature of what is being offered it may be necessary to confirm the following:

- Cost of tickets/seats/access you will provide – common practice is to value these at 'face value', that is at the price you would charge a normal customer
- Cost of food and beverages provided as part of your packages which contain 'hospitality' – where separate staff (cooks, wait staff, security, supervisors) are to be allocated to these hospitality arrangements, then the cost of labour/wages must also be calculated
- Cost of buying new uniforms or clothing – this may be necessary where the name and logo of the sponsor must be carried/displayed on (say) shirts, hats, helmets
- Cost of preparing and/or purchasing signage, banners and other advertising/promotional material you are required to display
- Cost of sign-writing vehicles, buildings, and other items with name/logo of sponsor
- Cost associated with preparing and purchasing new stationery containing sponsor name/logo
- Costs of gifts identified/required to be provided
- Cost of re-designing bromides/templates for printing tickets and programmes, badging clothes, lodging advertisements with the media

- Cost of travelling to, attending and participating in required meetings which have been identified as being necessary as part of the sponsorship deal
- Cost of supplying discounts which are being provided to organisation partners and customers
- Cost of labour to manage the sponsorship – This cost can embrace:
 - Correspondence
 - Meetings with sponsorship organisers
 - General organisation duties – arranging interviews, issuing invitations, following-up, liaison duties, event management, media management, sponsorship monitoring and evaluation.

Geldard and Sinclair (2005) provide at Appendix 6 (pp. 411 – 413) a ‘Publicity Checklist’ about which they say:

“The publicity checklist details all likely expenditure items required to be produced or paid for by the business to ensure the sponsorship runs successfully. These additional costs add significantly to the overall price of the sponsorship and should be considered when assessing the sponsorship.”

When confirming the details of the sponsorship it may be necessary to include:

- Clarifying elements of existing sponsorship packages
- Negotiating variations to standard sponsorship packages
- Meeting with event organisers, boards and committees.

3.2 Confirm the return the organisation will receive for its sponsorship

Introduction

Ensuring that all parties understand clearly the details of the sponsorship activity is a critical aspect of the process and the organisation needs to confirm with the organisers exactly what benefits and returns it will receive from participation in the activity. One part of the sponsorship planning phase was to identify the expected benefits to the organisation and having outlined these desired outcomes, it is now important to confirm that they can be achieved.

The Relationship model

Geldard and Sinclair (2005, pp. 48 - 50) present 'The Sponsorship Unit Relationship Model' which they use as an interesting way of illustrating, understanding or describing the way a relationship between a sponsoree and a sponsor often develop.

They identify eight stages, as follows, and you are encouraged to read what they have to say about each:

- The Attraction – between the two parties
- The Approach – where one party introduces themselves to the other
- Courting – where the schmoozing occurs
- Proposal – where 'the question' is asked
- Engagement – where a positive answer to the question is received
- Marriage – where the contract is signed and the benefits start flowing
- Affairs – where you/the Club looks for other sponsors, and/or your sponsor looks for other sponsorees
- Divorce – where the relationship ends.

Benefits and returns for the organisation

There are many benefits or expected returns that an organisation wants from engaging in a sponsorship activity and they can vary. Options for benefits can include:

- Naming rights
- Hospitality
- Signage and banners
- Tickets/seats/attendance
- Access to staff, celebrities and officials
- Participation by staff in advertisement
- Media appearances by staff/management

- Product placement
- Logos and sponsor name on uniforms, tickets, programmes, marketing materials
- Exclusivity.

Confirming exactly what returns are expected is necessary for both parties to understand what their obligations are in order to create the best chance for the goals to be achieved. Confirmation could include:

- Obtaining verification that the expected outcomes for the host enterprise will be forthcoming. It is important that the sponsorship organisers are clear about what the organisation expects to gain from engaging in the activity so they can promote the organisation effectively during the event. It also helps if the expected returns are verified in case there are any queries after the activity has been completed
- Quantifying and fully describing expectations of the host enterprise. Again, it is necessary to state the expectations in quantifiable terms as much as possible. This allows a clearer assessment of the actual returns when analysing the success or failure of the sponsorship activity
- Adjusting expectations in accordance with feedback and/or information received from the organiser, including increasing, decreasing or substituting expectations. It may be necessary to alter the expectations after meetings and discussions with the event organisers. This is quite normal and it allows both parties to realign expectations and to agree on the desired outcomes so as to avoid confusion or misunderstandings later
- Explaining the host enterprise objectives in relation to the sponsorship being considered. Clarifying expectations and communicating the organisation's objectives helps the sponsorship activity organisers to understand what the sponsor actually desires and this can make it easier for the organisers to support attainment of desired returns
- Advising organisers that the identified returns to the host enterprise are expected to form part of a legally binding agreement that will be entered into between the two parties. Including the expectations in a contract creates a clear guideline for the delivery of the activity and helps to avoid any potential conflict as a result of non-attainment of expected returns.

3.3 Negotiate additional opportunities as a result of the initial sponsorship

Introduction

Engaging in a sponsorship activity can be very advantageous to an organisation and if the event is a success it may be useful to explore further collaboration opportunities. Working together with a sponsorship organiser allows the organisation to see if there are any areas of potential opportunity and also it gives the organisation a chance to see if the organisers are professional and efficient at organising sponsorship events.

Seeking more opportunities

Sponsoring an event or taking part in sponsorship activates provides positive marketing opportunities for the organisation and it may be a good idea to investigate other sponsorship possibilities with the organisers. If you show the event organisers that your organisation is willing and able to engage in these activities, this might convince the organisers that your enterprise is a preferable organisation to partner with. Building a good relationship could enable the organisation to negotiate better conditions for future events or to develop a more long-term agreement for sponsorship with more exposure.

It is important to maintain positive relationships with sponsorship organisers in order to:

- Encourage their cooperation with you
- Motivate them to continue, extend or increase engagement with other activities
- Send a positive message to competitors who may be watching
- Facilitate a harmonious working relationship
- Help 'smooth over' the inevitable 'bumps in the road' which often emerge as part of such a relationship
- Keep promises you have made about your orientation to the relationship.

Some of the opportunities that could be negotiated could include:

- Exclusivity for future events
- Increased signage, advertising and media exposure
- Reduced cash contributions
- Part-payment for facility and equipment use
- Major sponsor package
- Increased benefits and access for staff and customers
- Discounts and promotional rates for other products and services.

The main point to recognise is that initial sponsorship can lead to better sponsorship conditions in the future. Building trust is the key!

3.4 Complete contracts in relation to the sponsorship

Introduction

A formal agreement or contract should form the basis of all sponsorships. This section explains why a formal agreement or contract should be used, discusses the legalities associated with entering into legal relations with a sponsor, and identifies details which may be contained in such a document. Note: the information in this section is not intended as 'legal advice', It is indicative of what may occur in relation to contracts and you are advised to always seek qualified legal advice before entering into any contract.

Contract details

All sponsorship agreements should be in writing. For financial activities, a full contract should be drawn up and legal advice sought by both sides prior to money exchanging hands. For partnership activity, where no money is exchanged, or where activities are quickly executed, a letter of agreement may be sufficient.

Need to use a formal document

In this context a 'formal document' refers to a written contract, properly prepared, vetted/approved by both parties (their management and legal advisors), and signed.

It does not refer to a verbal contract (see below), or a loose, hand-written arrangement drafted on-the-spot on a scrap of paper or the back of a napkin. While the potential exists for the legal system to uphold these types of arrangements (because the potential exists for them both to be deemed legitimate and legally binding under Contract law), standard business practice is to require a more formal arrangement.

Your need to use a formal written contract:

- So everyone knows exactly what the other party is thinking, what they want and what they have agreed to provide – something in writing is just a lot more convenient and provides a lot more surety about what was intended when the deal was made/negotiations occurred
- In order for management and legal advisors to have something to scrutinise and approve or make suggestions about in relation to amendments which may need to be considered/made
- To have a permanent copy of the arrangements which were made – so it can be referred to throughout the life of the contract to:
 - Guide action
 - Enable monitoring of performance
 - Clarify issues arising
- Because a written contract tends to encourage both parties to properly and fully discharge their obligations because they know there is a greater potential for the other party to take legal action if they fail to do so.

Given the complex nature of Contract law you are best advised to:

- Involve your legal advisors in the drafting of any sponsorship contracts
- Have your legal team read and explain to you the details of any sponsorship contract before they approve it for signing
- Include someone with legal training on your Sponsorship Committee
- Gain management approval for all contracts before signing them.

Effect of entering into a contract

The effect of entering into (that is, signing a contract on behalf of the enterprise) a legal contract for sponsorship includes:

- You are legally committed to honouring the promises you have made – this applies in the eyes of the law:
 - Whether you have read the contract or not
 - Regardless of whether the deal you have struck with the other party is a good deal or a bad deal
- The other party is legally obliged to honour the promises they have made – again this applies regardless of whether or not they have read the contract, or made a good or bad deal
- Action can be taken in the Civil court if either party fails to follow through on their promises as stated in the contract – this results in ‘remedies for non-performance’ or ‘breach of contract’ and commonly involves:
 - Suing the other party to obtain damages, an injunction (an order) to stop the other party from doing a specific act, or compelling them to complete/fulfil an act they promised to do.

Verbal contracts

In general, verbal contracts (also known as ‘oral contracts’) are best avoided.

In practice, many small sponsorships (especially with smaller, owner-operated businesses) agreements are successfully entered into and effectively discharged without recourse to a written contract.

The law will hold, if there is a need to turn to the Courts for decisions, that verbal contracts (that is, contracts made without the contents being ‘reduced to writing’) can be legally binding providing the necessary requirements have been fulfilled.

These essential requirements relate to the need for:

- An offer to have been made
- An acceptance to have been made
- Consideration to have occurred
- Legality of object or intent
- Capacity of the parties to form/enter into a contract.

In most cases however where there is a dispute over a verbal contract the most common outcome is not for the parties to go to Court, but to simply save themselves the time, trouble and money of legal action and let the matter lapse.

As they say ‘A verbal contract isn’t worth the paper it’s printed on’!

Possible contract details

Context of the contract

The sponsorship contract can contain almost anything.

There is no legal limit as to what may be included, providing the contract does not require anyone to do anything which is illegal.

The critical things for you to ensure are:

- It does not contain anything you do not agree to
- It does not contain anything you do not understand
- It only commits you to doing what you want to do/are prepared to do for the support you are getting
- It commits the sponsor/organisers to doing what they believe they have promised they will do
- The duration of the contract (start and finish dates for the sponsorship) are what you thought they would be
- It has been approved by management and legal advisors before they are signed
- It has been signed by the appropriate people representing both parties.

Possible specific contents

It is common for sponsorship contracts to set out clearly all the following details as a basic minimum:

- An outline of what the sponsorship relates to – this may be the name of the organisation, the fact the sponsorship is for a certain project,/purpose or event
- The explicit responsibilities of both parties – there is no comprehensive list of what this may encompass because responsibilities will have been the subject of negotiation and always relate directly to the nature, term and value of the relationship/contract/package.

Common inclusions in this regard are:

- Legal liabilities of both parties
- Terms and conditions – as determined during negotiations
- Specific exclusions – which were also stipulated/agreed to as part of the deal
- Personnel with specific responsibilities which are central to arrangements and agreements – such as availability of/access to staff/management/celebrities for interviews, media appearances, promotional activities
- Nominated activities which are agreed to as part of the exchange of ‘something for something’ which lies at the heart of both contracts and sponsorship.
- Care needs to be taken to spend time clarifying and describing this as comprehensively as possible so there is no room for misinterpretation on either side as to exactly what each party is entitled to, and can expect to receive.

Time spent detailing these activities is time well spent and can save many hours later on, and avoid much confusion, anger and disappointment throughout the term of the contract:

- Benefits – this relates directly to nominated activities listed above.

A table or list should be included which clearly and simply, yet comprehensively, sums up what each party will receive as benefits under the agreement.

Details might include:

- Number of times a hospitality tent will be provided, maximum guests to attend, sample food and beverage menus, number of service staff, hours of operation
- Number, size, wording and placement of signage
- Number and type of tickets to be provided including specifications of games, venues, competitions this applies to
- Number, and duration, of meetings with staff, management, celebrities or nominated people
- Merchandise which can be displayed and/or sold
- Commitment by the organisers to purchase specified products/services from the sponsor
- Exclusivity arrangements, or restrictions applying to certain other companies/sponsors in order to optimise benefit to the sponsor
- Financial obligations this will/may address:
 - Value of the package being offered to the sponsor
 - The cash being provided by the sponsor – as well as:
 - When it will be paid
 - How it will be paid
 - The value and/or type of any in-kind support being provided
 - Commitment by both parties – to (for example):
 - Cooperate fully with each other
 - Share information which is of mutual benefit
 - Work together on nominated tasks
 - Maintain confidentiality
 - Agreed penalties which may be applied in certain circumstances if nominated aspects of the contract are not/cannot be completed/discharged as agreed
 - Duration of the contract – plus details of any option for extension or renewal/roll-over
 - Details of agreed release forms and waivers

A glossary of terms, words, expressions or acronyms which may apply to:

- The Organisation
- The organising enterprise
- The agreement
- The event or activity.

3.5 Brief staff in relation to the sponsorship deal that has been entered into

Introduction

Participating in a sponsorship activity or event may involve many departments and staff within the organisation. For the event to be successful it is essential to inform all relevant people about the details of the activity. Failure to inform people effectively could negatively impact on the overall success of the event which could lead to missed opportunities for the organisation.

Communicate with staff about the sponsorship activity

When communicating with staff about the sponsorship activity it may be necessary to:

- Make general staff aware of what is being planned, when and why
- Ensure the event is diarised into all internal registers and reservation sheets/books – to avoid embarrassing double-booking of the venue
- Roster sufficient staff to enable/support the event
- Arrange the required physical resources for the event
- Issue appropriate invitations
- Place advertisements about the event where and where deemed necessary
- Organise the venue and services to be provided – in some cases:
 - The organisers may want to hold the event when other events are occurring
 - You will need to ensure there are no other events being held at the time which will place undue strain on the resources of the organisation
- Ensuring staff, management, and other key personnel are available on the day to meet the event organisers and be available to the media – it is vital:
 - All these people receive sufficient advance notification of your need for them to attend – so they can make appropriate arrangements
 - You meet with all these individuals/groups and inform them of what is required of them in regard to participating in the event – in some cases there can be a need to hold 'training sessions' to optimise their engagement with the event organisers and the media
- Advising staff of personnel involved in the sponsorship arrangement
- Explaining the possible impact of the sponsorship agreement on traditional workloads
- Explaining revised or new policies and procedures to support the sponsorship
- Encouraging commitment to the sponsorship
- Highlighting benefits that may flow to staff from involvement in the sponsorship, such as attending events, and meeting celebrities.

3.6 Participate actively and willingly in the sponsored event/activity

Introduction

After making the decision to sponsor an activity or event, planning the desired outcomes from participation, and finalising the contract, it is then time to take part in the sponsorship activity. It is important that all staff are aware of why the organisation is participating in the event and what their role is. The success of the activity will depend on the enthusiasm and vigour with which staff get involved with the event.

Getting involved in the event or activity

A lot of preparation is completed before a sponsorship activity or event has even begun. This pre-event work is undertaken to ensure the event will have the best conditions for success and to establish exactly what the organisation is trying to achieve from participation in it. The type of event could vary greatly but it is important that all people involved with the activity are engaged and committed to the success of the event. Active participation could include:

- Supporting event organisers with requests
- Operating specialist equipment
- Helping guests and participants with directions
- Identifying any potential issues or problems
- Smiling and being friendly towards all participants
- Completing tasks and roles promptly and efficiently
- Making sure all utilised areas are safe, clean and easily accessible
- Displaying and distributing advertising or marketing materials as per organisational requirements.

3.7 Ensure the terms and conditions of the sponsorship agreement are discharged

Introduction

As was discussed in previous units, the contract provides a guideline for what obligations and duties each party has in relation to the agreed sponsorship activity. Signing a contract does not always mean that all of the stipulations are completed. This could be due to many reasons, such as weather, larger/lower than expected attendance or equipment failure but it is important to make sure that all the conditions of the contract are discharged appropriately.

Checking contract details of participation

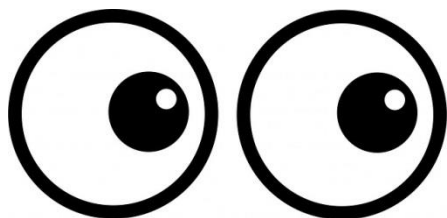

Not only is important to actively participate in the sponsored event, it is also necessary to make sure that all of the aspects of the contract are completed as agreed. As a result, it is important that all staff understand clearly what role and work they are obligated to perform during the activity or event. It is also necessary to have people allocated to check that contract terms and conditions are discharged. There could be quite varied contract conditions including:

- Providing resources as identified in the contract, including products, services and other advice, assistance and information
- Ensuring relevant quantities are provided
- Ensuring supply dates are complied with
- Checking spaces are organised and set-up as agreed
- Communicating with event organisers that agreed actions are being administered as per the contract conditions
- Providing mechanisms for staff and participants to be able to advise of any issues with their ability to complete tasks as required.

3.8 Monitor the application of sponsorship contributions, as previously established

Introduction

Whilst a sponsorship activity or event is underway, it is necessary to have people monitor the progress of the activity. It is not the end of the process when the event begins even though a lot of planning work has been completed to get to this point. It is important for the organisation to appoint people to monitor the event's progress and they must have a good understanding of the details of the sponsorship agreement in order to be able to ensure that each party is contributing what they agreed to.

What needs to be monitored?

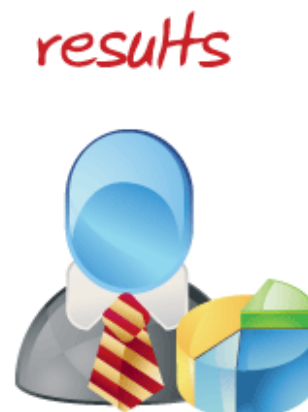

There are many aspects of a sponsorship activity that will need to be monitored whilst the event is running. The actual areas that need to be observed may differ according to the contract and agreed contributions, but time and resources will need to be allocated to check the progress of the event. Monitoring the activity or event might include:

- Meeting with organisers to obtain event updates and progress reports. In a previous unit relationship building was explored as an integral part of any successful sponsorship activity, and having a good relationship with event organisers is important in the monitoring process as all parties need to feel comfortable to express concerns or raise issues. It is important to meet with the organisers regularly and to speak openly about any areas of concern and to find solutions to any problems. Regular update reports allow the organisation to respond quickly to any issues and to ensure the success of the event
- Visit events and sites to observe activity, advertising, product placement and similar. It will be necessary to check agreed aspects of the contract by visiting the areas where the activity is occurring. It may be required to move advertising signage or to alter the manner in which products or services are being delivered. It is not sufficient to check only one time, and it will be important to check different sites at various times to make sure that continuity is maintained even if staff have changed
- Monitor media to identify advertising for the event or activity. Checking the media response to the event is useful and it is important to keep a record of any media advertising that is observed for future reference in order to gauge the success of the exposure from the activity and to make sure that the organisers have alerted media as agreed. If a certain amount of advertising was committed to by the organisers, then it will be necessary to find evidence of advertising
- Maintaining knowledge regarding the contents, terms and conditions of the contract. It may be useful for key personnel to keep copies of the agreed support with them in order to check that all parties are contributing as outlined
- Taking remedial action where practice or results are below stated expectations. It may be necessary to alter aspects of the event due to many reasons and that is why regular update meetings and reports are critical to the success of the event.

3.9 Record results and outcomes of participation in the sponsorship, as previously determined

Introduction

Determining the expectations for returns from engaging in the sponsorship activity was a key part of the whole process and it would be a wasted exercise if evidence of the results of the event were not gathered. Collecting data and evidence that directly relates to the expected outcomes enables a thorough evaluation to be conducted after the event has concluded. It is important to identify different areas where relevant information and feedback of the activity could be obtained and to actively search for this information whilst the event is underway and even after the activity is over.

Recording results

Detailing the expected returns from engaging in the sponsorship activity should provide a basis for identifying what type of information needs to be collected to check benefits of participating in the event. If increased media exposure was identified as an expected outcome, then it will be necessary to gather data relating to media activity. If increased revenue or sales were outlined as an intended goal, then collecting sales figures for the activity period needs to be obtained. No matter what the KPI's are, it is important that all relevant data is collected and stored effectively in order to provide an opportunity for evaluation of the overall performance of the sponsorship activity. Recording results of participation in sponsorship activities may include:

- Taking still and moving photographic images/records of the event and ancillary activities. With visual recording technology so readily available nowadays, it is easy to gather pictures and videos of different aspects of the event. This enables the organisation to record evidence of agreed contributions by the organisation and the organisers as well as document examples of mistakes or issues for further evaluation
- Filing hard copy documentation relating to the sponsored event, including media articles, media advertising, periodic reports, feedback sheets, market research data. The more recorded evidence that can be collected, the better. Gathering media articles, examples of advertising materials, and recording feedback from activity participants, ensures that the organisation has sufficient evidence of the expected returns from engaging in the event which can be used for future guidance and for analysis of the activity itself
- Recording statistical results in accordance with identified key performance indicators. Statistics may refer to numbers of attendees, sales figures, number of media articles, feedback responses to certain questions, or actual identified costs. Statistics can be analysed against expected results and previous sponsorship activities.

Work Projects

It is a requirement of this Unit you complete Work Projects as advised by your Trainer. You must submit documentation, suitable evidence or other relevant proof of completion of the project to your Trainer by the agreed date.

- 3.1 Provide your trainer with an example of an email or letter confirming agreed actions and commitments for an event or activity at your organisation.
 - 3.2 Show you trainer an example of expected returns from participation in a sponsorship activity including specific details such as:
 - Revenue increases
 - Participant numbers
 - Amount of media exposure.
 - 3.3 Provide your trainer with an example of increased or improved conditions for sponsorship activities that were negotiated after agreeing to initial sponsorship conditions.
 - 3.4 Show your trainer an example of a contract that has been used for a sponsorship agreement or an event.
 - 3.5 Bring an example of a meeting agenda or an email detailing actions, resources and information regarding event participation from your organisation.
 - 3.6 Describe to your trainer a sponsorship activity that you took part in detailing any highlights or issues encountered.
 - 3.7 Provide your trainer with an example of products or merchandise quantities that have been checked and signed for an event or activity at your organisation. This could include:
 - Food or beverage delivery
 - Equipment or sponsorship promotional materials like hats, pens, or other items.
 - 3.8 Provide a written outline of how the progress of an event is monitored at your workplace and show your trainer.
 - 3.9 Bring an example of results that were achieved from participation in an event at your workplace. This could include:
 - KPI's, revenue/sales figures, feedback.

Summary

Implement sponsorship packages

Planning is an important part of the sponsorship activity and the more careful and thorough the planning, the more chance of event success. Implementing the sponsorship activities is a stage that requires enthusiastic participation from all stakeholders involved and it is necessary to:

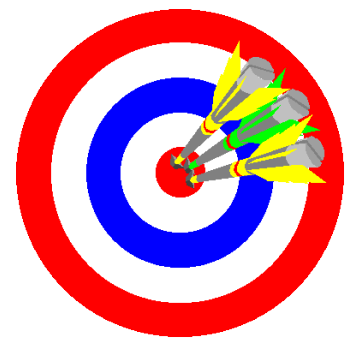

- Confirm contract details, expected outcomes, costs, agreed services and products, with all relevant personnel
- Sign the contract and share the details with relevant staff and participants
- Monitor the event progress and deal with any issues or concerns
- Communicate effectively with the sponsorship organisers
- Monitor the execution of agreed actions as per the contract
- Keep a record of the activities and the outcomes achieved for future reference.

Element 4: Evaluate involvement in the sponsorship

4.1 Assess the outcomes and results of the sponsorship against predetermined KPIs

Introduction

Measuring sponsorship outcomes can be loosely divided into a public relations approach where outputs from the activity are summarised or an advertising and marketing approach where surveys summarise the attitudes developed from the sponsorship event or activities. Evaluating outcomes against pre-determined KPI's is a critical step in the sponsorship activity process as it enables an evaluation of the overall success of the activity to be conducted which may directly influence future marketing activities for the organisation.

Managing the measurement process

Not only is it necessary to collect data and analyse it, it is also important to consider the management process as well. If the process of analysing data and feedback is flawed, this can then impact on future proposals and business decisions. Michael Hammer, a president of a management education firm, believes that 'operational measurement is fundamental and of increasing importance to strategic systems that guide decision-making' (In Cornwell 2014) and that if the measurement and subsequent analysis based upon the results is wrong, then future business decisions may be negatively impacted. Hammer explains that there are seven measurement sins (Hammer 2007) including:

1. Vanity - the selection of measures that make management look good.
2. Provincialism – keeping within organizational or industry boundaries when new measures are needed.
3. Narcissism – measuring from one's own point of view, not that of the customer.
4. Laziness – assuming one's knows what to measure without giving it thought.
5. Pettiness – measuring a small subset of what should be measured.
6. Inanity – measuring without thought of how measurement or actions based on it will influence the organization.
7. Frivolity – not being serious about measuring.

Measuring outcomes against KPI's

As discussed in previous units, measuring sponsorship activities may be linked to results in brand awareness, brand associations, brand attitudes, brand attachment and brand experience (Cornwell 2014). It is important to gather the available data that has been recorded and to evaluate the data in relation to increases in business or customer relationship to the organisation. Assessing results of a sponsorship activity could include:

- Compiling data that has been captured. This means getting all of the available data together and sorting it into different categories that make it easier to use
- Quantifying statistical data
- Comparing actual outcomes/results against projections, expectations and nominated key performance indicators. The clearer and more specific the projected outcomes were will make it easier at this point to analyse actual results. It is also important to have access to results and data that is aligned to the goals of the activity
- Seeking reasons behind the attainment or non-attainment of stated targets and objectives. Actual results may not always match the projected outcomes and it is important to use the results and other feedback to ascertain why certain targets or outcomes were not achieved
- Often sponsorship evaluation will be based around the Return on Investment (ROI) which is the gains of an investment minus the cost of the investment, divided by the cost of the investment.

4.2 Seek feedback on the sponsorship event or activity

Introduction

It may seem obvious but gathering feedback from relevant stakeholders and participants regarding the sponsorship activity is a critical step in the event process. There may be many people connected to the event somehow and all of their feedback is important to gauge the overall performance of the activity and to use for future events. It may be necessary to seek feedback other than through sources that were planned. This may be due to alterations in the event or because of issues that were observed that were not anticipated.

Compiling feedback from sponsorship activities

Feedback is an important tool for determining the success or failure of an activity and it also can assist in the planning of future activities. Seeking feedback from as many stakeholders as possible should be planned for and it is important to make sure that feedback is clear, honest and comprehensive.

The staff involved or connected to the event need to be provided with opportunities to give feedback about concerns, issues or successes of the sponsorship activity. Feedback from staff could be gathered from staff feedback surveys, meetings, interviews and observation.

Obviously the customers who participated in the event need to be provided with opportunities to comment on the initiative. Customer evaluation or feedback surveys are an effective way to gather information but they must be easily accessible, comprehensive and responses easily analysed.

Suppliers, partners, consultants and external stakeholders also need to be able to offer feedback relating to the activity. Although they may not seem to be directly connected to the activity, their feedback may help to identify issues or areas for improvement. Feedback may need to be gathered from:

- Sponsorship partners
- Participants in the sponsored event/activity
- Members of the general public
- Enterprise staff who attended and/or worked on the event
- Industry peak bodies
- Government agencies
- Joint venture partners, such as suppliers/providers who provided assistance to the host enterprise sponsorship activities.

4.3 Provide feedback to the organiser of the sponsorship event or activity

Introduction

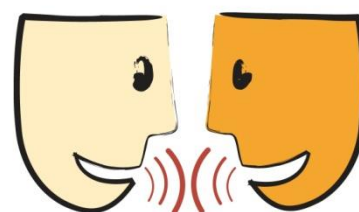

The organisation participated in the sponsorship activity to receive some sort of benefit. These benefits could vary greatly, but ultimately some sort of return is expected. It is always a goal that the marketing event is successful and the organisation will evaluate the activity and identify the internal strengths and weaknesses of its staff and others connected to the event. It is important for the organisation to provide feedback to the organiser in order to highlight positives and areas for improvement for future events. Providing feedback can also help to establish a more communicative relationship with the organisers which could lead to a longer term partnership.

Providing feedback to event organisers

Most reputable and professional enterprises will incorporate feedback opportunities into all of their activities. Sponsorship organisers should be no different and it would be expected that they provide feedback mechanisms as a part of the initiative. It is important that any feedback that is provided to the organisers is clear and evidence is supplied:

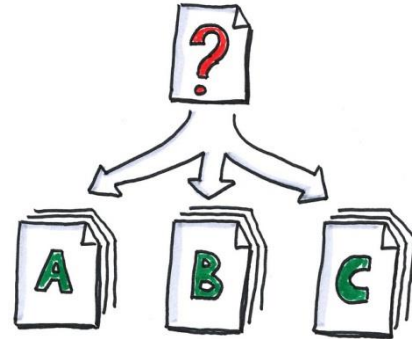

- Providing hard and soft data regarding the effects of the sponsorship on the organisation. This may take the form of photographs, videos, survey results, observations and statistics. The clearer and more comprehensive the more chance there is that the organisers will believe the feedback and respond to it
- Meeting with those involved to discuss the general implementation of the event, including identification of special circumstances that impacted on the event, such as weather, operational problems, failure of a celebrity to attend and similar occurrences. No event is ever implemented perfectly and there are many aspects of a sponsorship activity that are out of the control of the organisers and the participating organisation. It is important to meet the organisers and to be able to share general impressions of the event's performance
- Sharing information is a significant part of relationship building and open communication will ensure stronger partnerships and improved future performance.

4.4 Determine whether similar sponsorship involvement will occur

Introduction

After completing a sponsorship activity or event with a partner, it may be possible to investigate a continued relationship with the sponsor organisers. This will only be determined after a full evaluation of the activity has been conducted with an analysis of the returns and benefits to the organisation. The relationship between the two parties will need to be examined as well to identify if it has been effective and aligned with the organisation's vision and mission.

Analysing the effectiveness of the activity

As has been discussed in previous units, evaluating the overall success or failure of the sponsorship activity is an important part of the whole process. The organisation identified targets or outcomes that it wanted to achieve from engagement in the event and if these outcomes were attained then it may be worthwhile for the organisation to consider partnering with the sponsorship organisers or other sponsorship partners in future activities. In determining whether the organisation should participate in similar sponsorship activities, it is important to evaluate:

- The relationship between the parties:
 - Was it effective?
 - Was it easy to communicate with the sponsorship organisers?
 - Did the organisers deliver all that was agreed or promised?
- The outcomes of the event:
 - Did the organisation receive the returns as expected?
 - Were the costs kept within budget?
 - Were staff engaged and happy with the activities?
 - Was the media exposure extensive and effective?
- The process:
 - Was the planning phase conducted successfully?
 - Were there any issues that were not planned for?
 - Was it disruptive to the organisation's daily operations?

If it is deemed that the event was ultimately a success and that the organisation gained benefits from the sponsorship activity, and then it may be beneficial to consider engaging in similar sponsorship activities in the future.

4.5 Archive lessons learned from the sponsorship engagement for future reference

Introduction

The keeping of records of the sponsorship activity which relate to all stages of the event helps to form a foundation on which future events can be built. The feedback regarding the activity becomes extremely important as a starting point to improve any sponsorship activities that may be considered for future engagement. Being able to draw upon past experiences is an integral aspect of the quality assurance process and it is critical for the success of future events that information and evaluations of past events can be easily accessed.

Storing useful information

Reasons to keep the records

It is important to keep an up-to-date list of sponsorship engagement with corresponding levels, benefits and details for several important 'operational' reasons:

- So others in the organisation can access the information when/if they need to
- To facilitate changes in sponsorship committees, key positions in the organisation and management of the enterprise
- So you have some form of definite record of:
 - Agreements which have been made – even where you only enter into a verbal arrangement, time should be paid to recording what the details of the agreement were even though no formal contract was prepared/signed
 - Sponsors who have been secured – by name and relevant contact details
 - Recognition activities provided to sponsors –that is, gift, letter of thanks, reception or event (together with details, including cost)
 - Action which has been taken to discharge contractual obligations – by date, occasion, numbers, value any other criteria relevant to the package which applied to the particular sponsorship level for the individual sponsor
- For future reference when:
 - You need to honour agreements under the arrangement/contract – so you know without doubt exactly what it is you must/are obliged to do
 - Time comes to review the sponsorship – so the basis for the evaluation is correct and now skewed as a result of people's poor memories/recollections
 - You are contacted to engage in further sponsorship activities– so you can refer to what you have done in the past, and see the agreements which were negotiated
- To demonstrate:
 - Sound, responsible and professional management practice
 - Openness, honesty and transparency to others in the organisation

- To make sure you:
 - Discharge all legally-contracted obligations under the sponsorship
 - Only discharge what you have agreed to provide – and no more (as this can cost you/lose you money)
 - Receive all the benefits from the sponsorship organisers that they agreed to provide – at the time they agreed to provide them.

Options for keeping these records

Some organisations rely only on the memory of staff or management – and the goodwill and honesty of the sponsorship organisers – to remember what has occurred in relationship to sponsorships.

In small organisations where there may only be one sponsor and the agreement is a very loose one (that is, neither the enterprise nor the sponsorship organisers are overly concerned about the benefits they receive), this may be acceptable but in most cases this approach is not recommended.

The key is to formalise arrangements and this can be done using a combination of two approaches such as:

- Keeping a written record of everything relating to every sponsorship – keeping these documents in a physical filing system established by 'name of sponsorship activity'.

This file may contain:

- Request for Proposal
- Letter of Offer from the sponsorship organisers and organisation
- Proposal submitted by the enterprise/organisers
- Minutes/notes taken by the members of the Sponsorship Committee when dealing with sponsorship organisers or as part of the negotiation process
- Copy of contract/agreement
- All receipts for expenses incurred as part of discharging the obligations of the parties in relation to the contract
- Records of all monies and/or goods and services supplied by the organisation under the contract
- Any correspondence received from and/or sent to the sponsorship organisers – including requests for changes to agreements, complaints/issues arising, compliments
- Copy of all printing and media advertising (and PR) undertaken which contains mention of/reference to the organisation
- Copies of any reports provided during/as part of the sponsorship
- Final evaluation of the sponsorship
- Establishing a database – to:
 - List sponsorship partners
 - Address/record all matters referred to above
- Updating the file/s.

As a basic principle the files/records need to be updated every time a recordable action occurs.

Every time one of the events/actions listed above takes place, the record/file needs to be updated.

To make sure this happens some formal protocols/SOPs need to be put in place addressing:

- Allocation of responsibility for file maintenance to individuals
- Nomination of all facts and activities which need to be recorded
- Details of review and audit of the file.

Work Projects

It is a requirement of this Unit you complete Work Projects as advised by your Trainer. You must submit documentation, suitable evidence or other relevant proof of completion of the project to your Trainer by the agreed date.

- 4.1 Provide an example of a post-event report outlining outcomes of the event.
 - 4.2 Bring an example of feedback gathered from an event or sponsorship activity conducted at your organisation.
 - 4.3 Show your trainer an example of feedback provided to a third party or external provider relating to an event that your organisation took part in.
 - 4.4 Provide your trainer with an example of a continued partnership or engagement with a partner organisation. This could be a:
 - Renewed contract
 - New sponsorship agreement
 - Marketing materials from several events or activities with the same external party.
 - 4.5 Show your trainer an example of a report relating to a delivered event which may include:
 - Feedback
 - Recommendations for future event participation.

Summary

Evaluate involvement in the sponsorship

Conducting an evaluation of sponsorship activity participation is an integral part of the quality performance process. Not only is important to determine whether KPI's and targets were achieved, it is also necessary to gather feedback from relevant personnel and to document this feedback and share it with appropriate staff and partners. Feedback may relate to many parts of the activity including:

- Outcomes
- Involvement of the sponsorship organisers
- Communication
- Agreed contributions such as promotional materials, advertising, product placement
- Issues or highlights.

It is also important to document the feedback and results, and to store the data so that it is easily accessible for future event participation.

Presentation of written work

1. Introduction

It is important for students to present carefully prepared written work. Written presentation in industry must be professional in appearance and accurate in content. If students develop good writing skills whilst studying, they are able to easily transfer those skills to the workplace.

2. Style

Students should write in a style that is simple and concise. Short sentences and paragraphs are easier to read and understand. It helps to write a plan and at least one draft of the written work so that the final product will be well organised. The points presented will then follow a logical sequence and be relevant. Students should frequently refer to the question asked, to keep 'on track'. Teachers recognise and are critical of work that does not answer the question, or is 'padded' with irrelevant material. In summary, remember to:

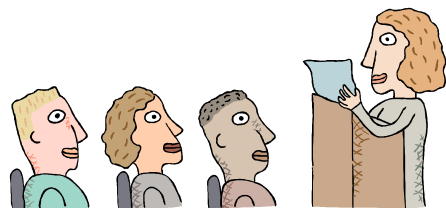

- Plan ahead
- Be clear and concise
- Answer the question
- Proofread the final draft.

3. Presenting Written Work

Types of written work

Students may be asked to write:

- Short and long reports
- Essays
- Records of interviews
- Questionnaires
- Business letters
- Resumes.

Format

All written work should be presented on A4 paper, single-sided with a left-hand margin. If work is word-processed, one-and-a-half or double spacing should be used. Handwritten work must be legible and should also be well spaced to allow for ease of reading. New paragraphs should not be indented but should be separated by a space. Pages must be numbered. If headings are also to be numbered, students should use a logical and sequential system of numbering.

Cover Sheet

All written work should be submitted with a cover sheet stapled to the front that contains:

- The student's name and student number
- The name of the class/unit
- The due date of the work
- The title of the work
- The teacher's name
- A signed declaration that the work does not involve plagiarism.

Keeping a Copy

Students must keep a copy of the written work in case it is lost. This rarely happens but it can be disastrous if a copy has not been kept.

Inclusive language

This means language that includes every section of the population. For instance, if a student were to write 'A nurse is responsible for the patients in her care at all times' it would be implying that all nurses are female and would be excluding male nurses.

Examples of appropriate language are shown on the right:

Mankind	Humankind
Barman/maid	Bar attendant
Host/hostess	Host
Waiter/waitress	Waiter or waiting staff
